NOTES.

* Ovid ſeems to have had the merit of inventing this beautiful ſpecies of writing epiſtles under feigned names. Though indeed Propertius has one compoſition of this ſort, an Epiſtle of Arethuſa to Lycortas, B. iv. Eleg. 3. It is a high improvement on the Greek Elegy, to which its dramatic form renders it much ſuperior. The judgment of the writer muſt chiefly appear, by opening the complaint of the perſon introduced, juſt at ſuch a period of time, as will give occaſion for the moſt tender ſentiments, and the moſt ſudden and violent turns of paſſion to be diſplayed. Ovid may perhaps be blamed for a ſameneſs of ſubjects in theſe epiſtles of his heroines; and his epiſtles are likewise too long; which circumſtance has forced him into a repetition and languor in the ſentiments. It would be a pleaſing taſk, and conduce to the formation of a good taſte, to ſhew how differently Ovid and the Greek Tragedians have made Medea, Phædra, and Deinaira, ſpeak on the very ſame occaſions. Such a compariſon would abundantly manifeſt the fancy and wit of Ovid, and the judgment and nature

SAPPHO TO PHAON.

SAY, lovely youth, that do'st my heart command,
 Can Phaon's eyes forget his Sappho's hand?
 Must then her name the wretched writer prove,
 To thy remembrance lost, as to thy love?
 Ask not the cause that I new numbers chuse, 5
 The Lute neglected, and the Lyric muse;

NOTES.

nature of Euripides and Sophocles. If the character of Medea was not better supported in the Tragedy which Ovid is said to have produced, and of which Quintilian speaks so highly, than it is in her epistle to Jason, one may venture to declare, that the Romans would not yet have been vindicated from their inferiority to the Greeks in tragic Poetry.—It may be added, that some of Drayton's Heroical Epistles deserve praise, particularly that of Lord Surrey to Geraldine, Lady Jane Grey to Lord Guilford Dudley, Jane Shore to Edward the Fourth. Lord Hervey took the subject of Roxana to Usbeck from the incomparable Persian Letters of the President Montesquieu; the beauty of which writer is his expressive brevity; which Lord Hervey has lengthened to an unnatural degree, especially as Roxana is supposed to write just after she has swallowed a deadly poison, and during its violent operations.

The Italians have a writer of Heroical Epistles, Antonio Bruni; some of his subjects are, The Hebrew Mother to Titus Vespasian, Erminia to Tancred, Radamistus to Zenobia, Semiramis to Ninus, Catharine to Henry the Eighth. They were printed at Venice 1636, with prints from designs of Guido and Dominichino.

Flendus amor meus est : elegeïa flebile carmen ;
 Non facit ad lacrymas barbitos ulla meas.

Uror, ut, indomitis ignem exercentibus Euris,

Fertilis accensis messibus ardet ager. 10

Arva Phaon celebrat diversa Typhoïdos Aetnae,

Me calor Aetnaeo non minor igne coquit.

Nec mihi, dispositis quae jungam carmina nervis,

Proveniunt ; vacuae carmina mentis opus.

Nec me Pyrrhiades Methymniadesve puellae, 15

Nec me Lesbium caetera turba juvant.

Vilis Anaëtorie, vilis mihi candida Cydno :

Non oculis grata est Atthis, ut ante, meis ;

Atque aliae centum, quas non sine crimine amavi :

Improbe, multarum quod fuit, unus habes. 20

Est in te facies, sunt apti lusibus anni.

O facies oculis insidiosa meis !

Sume fidem et pharetram ; fies manifestus Apollo :

Accedant capiti cornua ; Bacchus eris.

Love taught my tears in sadder notes to flow,
 And tun'd my heart to Elegies of woe.
 I burn, I burn, as when through ripen'd corn
 By driving winds the spreading flames are born! 10
 Phaon to Aetna's scorching fields retires,
 While I consume with more than Aetna's fires!
 No more my soul a charm in music finds;
 Music has charms alone for peaceful minds.
 Soft scenes of solitude no more can please, 15
 Love enters there, and I'm my own disease.
 No more the Lesbian dames my passion move,
 Once the dear objects of my guilty love;
 All other loves are lost in only thine,
 Ah youth ungrateful to a flame like mine! 20
 Whom would not all those blooming charms surprize,
 Those heav'nly looks, and dear deluding eyes?
 The harp and bow would you like Phoebus bear,
 A brighter Phoebus Phaon might appear;
 Would you with ivy wreath your flowing hair, 25
 Not Bacchus' self with Phaon could compare:

NOTES.

VER. 12. A childish false thought!

VER. 17. No more] This allusion to her infamous passion is very indelicate indeed!

VER. 26. Not Bacchus self] These lines were evidently copied in the famous epigram of Lumine Acon dextro, &c. made on Louis de Maguiron, the favourite of Henry the Third of France, and the beautiful Princess of Eboli, who was deprived of the sight of one her eyes:

Blande puer, lumen quod habes, concede forori
 Sic tu cæcus Amor, sic erit illa Venus.

Et Phoebus Daphnen, et Gnosida Bacchus amavit ;

Nec norat lyricos illa, vel illa modos. 30

At mihi Pegafides blandiffima carmina dictant ;

Jam canitur toto nomen in orbe meum.

Nec plus Alcaeus, confors patriaeque lyraeque,

Laudis habet, quamvis grandius ille sonet.

Si mihi difficilis formam natura negavit ; 35

Ingenio formae damna rependo meae.

Sum brevis ; at nomen, quod terras impleat omnes,

Est mihi ; mensuram nominis ipsa fero. 40

Candida si non sum, placuit Cepheïa Perseo

Andromede, patriae fusca colore suae :

Et variis albae junguntur saepe columbae,

Et niger a viridi turtur amatur ave.

Si, nisi quae facie poterit te digna videri, 45

Nulla futura tua est ; nulla futura tua est,

At me cum legeres, etiam formosa videbar ;

Unam jurabas usque decere loqui.

Cantabam, memini (meminerunt omnia amantes)

Oscula cantanti tu mihi rapta dabas. 50

Haec quoque laudabas ; omnique a parte placebam,

Sed tum praecipue, cum fit amoris opus.

Yet Phoebus lov'd, and Bacchus felt the flame,
One Daphne warm'd, and one the Cretan dame;
Nymphs that in verse no more could rival me,
Than ev'n those Gods contend in charms with thee. 30
The muses teach me all their softest lays,
And the wide world resounds with Sappho's praise.
Tho' great Alcaeus more sublimely sings,
And strikes with bolder rage the founding strings,
No less renown attends the moving lyre, 35
Which Venus tunes, and all her loves inspire;
To me what nature has in charms deny'd,
Is well by wit's more lasting flames supply'd.
Tho' short my stature, yet my name extends
To heav'n itself, and earth's remotest ends. 40
Brown as I am, an Ethiopian dame
Inspir'd young Perseus with a gen'rous flame;
Turtles and doves of different hues unite,
And glossy jet is pair'd with shining white.
If to no charms thou wilt thy heart resign, 45
But such as merit, such as equal thine,
By none, alas! by none thou can'st be mov'd,
Phaon alone by Phaon must be lov'd!
Yet once thy Sappho could thy cares employ,
Once in her arms you centered all your joy: 50
No time the dear remembrance can remove,
For oh! how vast a memory has love?
My music, then, you could for ever hear,
And all my words were music to your ear.

Tunc te plus solito lascivia nostra juvabat, 60

Crebraque mobilitas, aptaque verba joco;

Quique, ubi jam amborum fuerat confusa voluptas,

Plurimus in lasso corpore languor erat.

Nunc tibi Sicelides veniunt nova praeda puellae;

Quid mihi cum Lesbo? Sicelis esse volo.

At vos erronem tellure remittite nostrum,

Nisiades matres, Nisiadesque nurus.

Neu vos decipiant blandae mendacia linguae: 65

Quae dicit vobis, dixerat ante mihi.

Tu quoque quae montes celebras, Erycina, Sicanos,

(Nam tua sum) vati consule, diva tuae.

An gravis inceptum peragit fortuna tenorem? 70

Et manet in cursu semper acerba suo?

Sex mihi natales ierant, cum lecta parentis

Ante diem lacrymas ossa bibere meas.

Arsit inops frater, victus meretricis amore;

Mistaque cum turpi damna pudore tulit.

Factus inops agili peragit freta coerulea remo: 75

Quasque male amisit, nunc male quaerit opes:

Me quoque, quod monui bene multa fideliter, odit.

Hoc mihi libertas, hoc pia lingua dedit.

Et tanquam defint, quae me sine fine fatigent,

Accumulat curas filia parva meas.

Ultima tu nostris accedis causa querelis:

Non agitur vento nostra carina suo. 80

Ecce, jacent collo sparsi sine lege capilli;

Nec premit articulos lucida gemma meos.

Veste

You stopp'd with kisses my enchanting tongue, 55
And found my kisses sweeter than my song.
In all I pleas'd, but most in what was best;
And the last joy was dearer than the rest.
Then with each word, each glance, each motion fir'd,
You still enjoy'd, and yet you still desir'd, 60
Till all dissolving in the trance we lay,
And in tumultuous raptures dy'd away.
The fair Sicilians now thy soul inflame;
Why was I born, ye Gods, a Lesbian dame?
But ah beware, Sicilian nymphs! nor boast 65
That wand'ring heart which I so lately lost;
Nor be with all those tempting words abus'd,
Those tempting words were all to Sappho us'd.
And you that rule Sicilia's happy plains, 70
Have pity, Venus, on your Poet's pains!
Shall fortune still in one sad tenor run,
And still increase the woes so soon begun?
Inur'd to sorrow from my tender years,
My parent's ashes drank my early tears;
My brother next, neglecting wealth and fame, 75
Ignobly burn'd in a destructive flame:
An infant daughter late my griefs increas'd,
And all a mother's cares distract my breast.
Alas, what more could fate itself impose,
But thee, the last and greatest of my woes? 80
No more my robes in waving purple flow,
Nor on my hand the sparkling di'monds glow;

Veste tegor vili: nullum est in crinibus aurum:

Non Arabo noster rore capillus olet.

Cui colar infelix? aut cui placuisse laborem?

Ille mihi cultus unicus auctor abest.

Molle meum levibus cor est violabile telis;

Et semper causa est, cur ego semper aniem.

Sive ita nascenti legem dixere sorores,

Nec data sunt vitae fila severa meae;

Sive abeunt studia in mores, artesque magistrae,

Ingenium nobis molle Thalia facit.

Quid mirum, si me primae lanuginis aetas

Abstulit, atque anni, quos vir amare potest?

Hunc ne pro Cephalo raperes, Aurora, timebam:

Et faceres; sed te prima rapina tenet.

Hunc si conspiciat quae conspicit omnia, Phoebe;

Iustus erit somnos continuare Phaon.

Hunc Venus in coelum curru vexisset eburno;

Sed videt et Marti posse placere suo.

O nec adhuc juvenis, nec jam puer! utilis aetas!

O decus, atque aevi gloria magna tui!

Huc ades, inque sinus, formose, relabere nostros:

Non ut ames oro, verum ut amare finas.

Scribimus, et lacrymis oculi rorantur obortis:

Aspice, quam sit in hoc multa litura loco.

Si tam certus eras hinc ire, modestius isses,

Et modo dixisses: Lesbii puella, vale.

No more my locks in ringlets curl'd diffuse
 The costly sweetness of Arabian dews,
 Nor braids of gold the varied tresses bind, 85
 That fly disorder'd with the wanton wind :
 For whom should Sappho use such arts as these ?
 He's gone, whom only she desir'd to please !
 Cupid's light darts my tender bosom move,
 Still is there cause for Sappho still to love : 90
 So from my birth the Sisters fix'd my doom,
 And gave to Venus all my life to come ;
 Or, while my Muse in melting notes complains,
 My yielding heart keeps measure to my strains.
 By charms like thine which all my soul have won,
 Who might not—ah! who would not be undone ?
 For those Aurora Cephalus might scorn,
 And with fresh blushes paint the conscious morn.
 For those might Cynthia lengthen Phaon's sleep,
 And bid Endymion nightly tend his sheep. 100
 Venus for those had rapt thee to the skies,
 But Mars on thee might look with Venus' eyes.
 O scarce a youth, yet scarce a tender boy !
 O useful time for lovers to employ !
 Pride of thy age, and glory of thy race, 105
 Come to these arms, and melt in this embrace ;
 The vows you never will return, receive ;
 And take at least the love you will not give.
 See, while I write, my words are lost in tears !
 The less my sense, the more my love appears. 110
 Sure

Non tecum lacrymas, non oscula summa tulisti ;
 Denique non timui, quod dolitura fui.
 Nil de te mecum est, nisi tantum injuria : nec tu,
 Admoneat quod te, pignus amantis habes.
 Non mandata dedi ; neque enim mandata dedissem
 Ulla, nisi ut nolles immemor esse mei. 120
 Per tibi, qui nunquam longe discedat ; Amorem,
 Perque novem juro, numina nostra, Deas ;
 Cum mihi nescio quis, Fugiunt tua gaudia, dixit :
 Nec me flere diu, nec potuisse loqui ;
 Et lacrymae deerant oculis, et lingua palato :
 Astrictum gelido frigore pectus erat.
 Postquam se dolor invenit ; nec pectora plangi,
 Nec puduit scissis exululare comis.
 Non aliter quam si nati pia mater adempti
 Portet ad extractos corpus inane rogos.
 Gaudet, et e nostro crescit moerore Charaxus 135
 Frater ; et ante oculos itque ridentque meos.
 Utque pudenda mei videatur causa doloris ;
 Quid dolet haec ? certe filia vivit, ait.
 Non veniunt in idem pudor atque amor : omne videbat
 Vulgus ; eram lacero pectus aperta sinu. 140

NOTES.

VER. 120. Esse mei] Trapp, in his Prelections, severely censures Ovid for his laziness and carelessness in ending so many of his pentameter verses with the words, mei, tui, and sui ; a fault which Tibullus and Propertius have avoided. But I cannot be of Trapp's opinion, that it is improper to end pentameter verses with words of three or more syllables ; which certainly gives a variety to the numbers, and is frequently done in some of the best Greek epigrams.

Sure 'twas not much to bid one kind adieu,
(At least to feign was never hard to you)
Farewell, my Lesbian love, you might have said;
Or coldly thus, Farewell, oh Lesbian maid!
No tear did you, no parting kifs receive, 115
Nor knew I then how much I was to grieve.
No lover's gift your Sappho could confer,
And wrongs and woes were all you left with her.
No charge I gave you, and no charge could give,
But this, Be mindful of our loves, and live. 120
Now by the Nine, those pow'rs ador'd by me,
And Love, the God that ever waits on thee,
When first I heard (from whom I hardly knew)
That you were fled, and all my joys with you,
Like some sad statue, speechless, pale I stood, 125
Grief chill'd my breast, and stop'd my freezing blood;
No sigh to rise, no tear had pow'r to flow,
Fix'd in a stupid lethargy of woe:
But when its way th' impetuous passion found, I
I rend my tresses, and my breast I wound; 130
I rave, then weep; I curse, and then complain;
Now swell to rage, now melt in tears again.
Not fiercer pangs distract the mournful dame,
Whose first-born infant feeds the fun'ral flame.
My scornful brother with a smile appears, 135
Insults my woes, and triumphs in my tears,
His hated image ever haunts my eyes,
And why this grief? thy daughter lives, he cries.

Stung

Tu mihi cura, Phaon; te somnia nostra reducant;
Somnia formoso condidiora die.

Illic te invenio, quanquam rigionibus absis; 145
Sed non longa fatis gaudia somnus habet.

Saepe tuos nostra cervice onerare lacertos,
Saepe tuae videor supposuisse meos. 150

Blandior interdum, verisque similima verba
Eloquor; et vigilant sensibus ora meis.

Oscula cognosco; quae tu committere linguae,

Aptaque consueras accipere, apta dare.

Ulteriora pudet narrare; sed omnia fiunt.

Et juvat, et sine te non libet esse mihi.

At cum se Titan ostendit, et omnia secum;

Tam cito me somnos destituisse queror.

Antra nemusque peto, tanquam nemus antraque
profint. 160

Conscia deliciis illa fuere tuis.

Illuc mentis inops, ut quam furialis Erichtho

Impulit, in collo crine jacente feror.

Antra vident oculi scabro pendentia topho,

Quae mihi Mygdonii marmoris instar erant.

Stung with my love, and furious with despair,
 All torn my garments, and my bosom bare,
 My woes, thy crimes, I to the world proclaim;
 Such inconsistent things are love and shame!
 'Tis thou art all my care and my delight,
 My daily longing, and my dream by night:
 Oh night more pleasing than the brightest day,
 When fancy gives what absence takes away,
 And, dress'd in all its visionary charms,
 Restores my fair deserter to my arms!
 Then round your neck in wanton wreath I twine,
 Then you, methinks, as fondly circle mine:
 A thousand tender words I hear and speak;
 A thousand melting kisses give, and take:
 Then fiercer joys, I blush to mention these,
 Yet, while I blush, confess how much they please.
 But when, with day, the sweet delusions fly,
 And all things wake to life and joy, but I,
 As if once more forsaken, I complain,
 And close my eyes to dream of you again:
 Then frantic rise, and like some Fury rove
 Through lonely plains, and through the silent grove,
 As if the silent grove, and lonely plains,
 That knew my pleasures, could relieve my pains.
 I view the grotto, once the scene of love,
 The rocks around, the hanging roofs above,

NOTES.

VER. 139. Stung with my love] The ten next verses are much superior to the original.

That

Invenio sylvam, quae saepe cubilia nobis 166

Praebuit, et multa texit opaca coma.

At non invenio dominum sylvaeque, meumque.

Vile solum locus est: dos erat ille loci.

Agnovi pressas noti mihi cespitis herbas; 170

De nostro curvum pondere gramen erat.

Incubui, tetigique locum qua parte fuisti;

Grata prius lacrymas combibit herba meas.

Quinetiam rami positis lugere videntur

Frondeb; et nullae dulce queruntur aves.

Sola virum non ulta pie moestissima mater 175

Concinit Ismarium Daulias ales Ityn.

Ales Ityn, Sappho desertos cantat amores:

Hactenus, ut media caetera nocte silent.

Est nitidus, vitroque magis perlucidus omni, 180

Fons facer; hunc multi numen habere putant.

Quem supra ramos expandit aquatica lotos,

Una nemus; tenero cespite terra viret.

Hic ego cum lassos posuisssem fletibus artus, 185

Constitit ante oculos Naias una meos.

Constitit, et dixit, "Quoniam non ignibus aequis

"Ureris, Ambracias terra petenda tibi.

That charm'd me more, with native moss o'ergrown,
 Than Phrygian marble, or the Parian stone, 166
 I find the shades that veil'd our joys before ;
 But, Phaon gone, those shades delight no more.
 Here the press'd herbs with bending tops betray
 Where oft entwin'd in am'rous folds we lay ; 170
 I kiss that earth which once was press'd by you,
 And all with tears the withering herbs bedew.
 For thee the fading trees appear to mourn,
 And birds defer their songs till thy return :
 Night shades the groves, and all in silence lie, 175
 All but the mournful Philomel and I :
 With mournful Philomel I join my strain,
 Of Tereus she, of Phaon I complain.

A spring there is, whose silver waters flow,
 Clear as a glass, the shining sands below : 180
 A flow'ry Lotos spreads its arms above,
 Shades all the banks, and seems itself a grove ;
 Eternal greens the mossy margin grace,
 Watch'd by the sylvan Genius of the place.
 Here as I lay, and swell'd with tears the flood, 185
 Before my sight a wat'ry Virgin stood :
 She stood and cry'd, " O you that love in vain !
 " Fly hence, and seek the fair Leucadian main ;
 " There stands a rock, from whose impending steep
 " Apollo's fane surveys the rolling deep ; 190
 " There

NOTES.

VER. 188. Leucadian main] Addison, with his usual exquisite humour, has given in the 233d Spectator an account of the persons, male and female, who leaped from the promontory of Leucate

“ Phœbus ab excelso, quantum patet, aspicit œquor :

“ Aëtiacum populi Leucadiumque vocant.

“ Hinc se Deucalion Pyrrhae succensus amore

“ Misit, et illaeso corpore pressit aquas. 195

“ Nec mora : versus Amor tetigit lentissima Pyrrhae

“ Pectora ; Deucalion igne levatus erat.

“ Hanc legem locus ille tenet, pete protinus altam

“ Leucada ; nec faxo defiluisse time.”

Ut monuit, cum voce abiit. Ego frigida furgo : 200

Nec gravidæ lacrymas continuere genae.

Ibimus, o Nymphae, monstrataque saxa petemus.

Sit procul infano victus amore timor.

Quicquid erit, melius quam nunc erit : aura, subito.

Et mea non magnum corpora pondus habent.

Tu quoque, mollis Amor, pennas suppone cadenti :

Ne sim Leucadiae mortua crimen aquae.

into the Ionian sea, in order to cure themselves of the passion of love. Their various characters, and effects of this leap, are described with infinite pleasantry. One hundred and twenty-four males, and one hundred and twenty-six females, took the leap in the 250th Olympiad ; out of them one hundred and twenty were perfectly cured. Sappho, arrayed like a Spartan virgin, and her harp in her hand, threw herself from the rock with such intrepidity, as was never before observed in any who had attempted that very dangerous leap ; from whence she never rose again, but was said to be changed into a swan as she fell, and was seen hovering in the air in that shape. Alcæus arrived at the promontory of Leucate that very evening, in order to take the leap on her account ; but hearing that her body could not be found, he very generously lamented her fall, and is said to have written his 125th ode on that occasion.

" There injur'd lovers, leaping from above,
 " Their flames extinguish, and forget to love.
 " Deucalion once with hopeless fury burn'd,
 " In vain he lov'd, relentless Pyrrha scorn'd : 194
 " But when from hence he plung'd into the main,
 " Deucalion scorn'd, and Pyrrha lov'd in vain.
 " Haste, Sappho, haste, from high Leucadia throw
 " Thy wretched weight, nor dread the deeps below !"
 She spoke, and vanish'd with the voice—I rise,
 And silent tears fall trickling from my eyes. 200
 I go, ye Nymphs ! those rocks and seas to prove ;
 How much I fear, but ah, how much I love !
 I go, ye Nymphs, where furious love inspires ;
 Let female fears submit to female fires.
 To rocks and seas I fly from Phaon's hate, 205
 And hope from seas and rocks a milder fate.
 Ye gentle gales, beneath my body blow,
 And softly lay me on the waves below !
 And thou, kind Love, my sinking limbs sustain,
 Spread thy soft wings, and waft me o'er the main,
 Nor let a Lover's death the guiltless flood profane !
 On Phoebus' shrine my harp I'll then bestow, 212
 And this Inscription shall be plac'd below,

NOTES.

VER. 207. Ye gentle gales] These two lines have been quoted as the most smooth and mellifluous in our language ; and they are supposed to derive their sweetness and harmony from the mixture of so many Iambics. Pope himself preferred the following line to all he had written, with respect to harmony :

Lo, where Mæotis sleeps, and hardly flows—

Inde chelyn Phoebō communia munera ponam :

Et sub ea versus unus et alter erunt.

“ Grata lyram posui tibi, Phoebe, poëtria Sappho :

“ Convenit illa mihi, convenit illa tibi.”

Cur tamen Actiacas miseram me mittis ad oras,

Cum profugum possis ipse referre pedem ?

Tu mihi Leucadia potes esse salubrior unda : 220

Et forma et meritis tu mihi Phoebus eris.

An potes, o scopulis undaque ferocior illa,

Si moriar, titulum mortis habere meae ?

At quanto melius jungi mea pectora tecum,

Quam poterant faxis praecipitanda dari ! 225

Haec sunt illa, Phaon, quae tu laudare solebas ;

Visaeque sunt toties ingeniosa tibi.

Nunc vellem facunda forent : dolor artibus obstat ;

Ingeniumque meis substitit omne malis.

Non mihi respondent veteres in carmina vires. 230

Plectra dolore tacent : muta dolore lyra est.

NOTES.

VER. 227.] Little can be added to the character that Addison has so elegantly drawn in the 223d and 229th numbers of the Spectator ; in which are inserted the translations which Philips, under Addison's eye, gave of the two only remaining of her exquisite odes ; one preserved by Dionysius Halicarnassus, and the other by Longinus. To the remarks that Pearce has made on the latter, I cannot forbear subjoining a remark of Tanaquil Faber on a secret and almost unobserved beauty of this ode : that in the eight last lines, the article ἢ, in the original, is repeated seven times, to represent the short breathings of a person in the act of fainting away, and pronouncing every syllable with difficulty. Two beautiful fragments are preserved ; the first consisting only of four lines in Fulvius Ursinus, which Horace has imitated in the twelfth ode of the third book, Tibi qualum, &c. ;

and

“ Here she who sung, to him that did inspire,
 “ Sappho to Phoebus consecrates her Lyre ; 215
 “ What suits with Sappho, Phoebus, suits with thee ;
 “ The gift, the giver, and the God agree.”

But why, alas, relentless youth, ah why
 To distant Seas must tender Sappho fly ?

Thy charms than those may far more pow’rful be,
 And Phoebus’ self is less a God to me. 221

Ah! canst thou doom me to the rocks and sea,
 Oh far more faithless and more hard than they ?

Ah! canst thou rather see this tender breast
 Dash’d on these rocks than to thy bosom prest ? 225

This breast which once, in vain! you lik’d so well ;
 Where the Loves play’d, and where the Muses dwell.

Alas! the Muses now no more inspire,
 Untun’d my lute, and silent is my lyre.

My languid numbers have forgot to flow, 230
 And fancy sinks beneath a weight of woe.

Lesbian Virgins, and ye Lesbian dames,
 Themes of my verse, and objects of my flames,
 No more your groves with my glad songs shall ring,
 No more these hands shall touch the trembling string :

and the other the beginning of an ode addressed to Evening, by Demetrius Phalareus, in the Oxford edition, by Gale, p. 104.

In one of Akenfide’s odes to lyric poetry, which have been too much depreciated, are two fine stanzas; one in the character of Alcæus, and the other on the character of Sappho :

— — Spirat adhuc Amor
 Vivuntque commissi calores
 Æoliæ fidibus puellæ !

Lesbides æquoreae, nupturaque nuptaque proles ;

Lesbides, Aeoliâ nomina dicta Iyra ;

Lesbides, infamem quae me fecistis amatae ;

Definite ad citharas turba venire meas. 234

Abstulit omne Phaon, quod vobis ante placebat.

(Me miseram ! dixi quam modo pene, meus !)

Efficite ut redeat : vates quoque vestra redibit.

Ingenio vires ille dat, ille rapit. 240

Ecquid ago precibus ? pectusne agreste movetur ?

An riget ? et Zephyri verba caduca ferunt ?

Qui mea verba ferunt, vellem tua vela referrent,

Hoc te, si sciperes, lente, decebat opus.

Sive redis, puppique tuae votiva parantur

Munera ; quid laceras pectora nostra mora ?

Solve ratem : Venus orta mari, mare praestet eunti,

Aura dabit cursum ; tu modo solve ratem.

Ipse gubernabit residens in puppe Cupido :

Ipse dabit tenera vela legetque manu.

Sive juvat longe fugisse Pelasgida Sappho ;

(Non tamen invenies, cur ego digna fuga.) 255

[O saltem miserae, Crudelis, epistola dicat :

Ut mihi Leucadiae fata petantur aquae.]

My Phaon's fled, and I those arts resign 236
 (Wretch that I am, to call that Phaon mine!)
 Return, fair youth, return, and bring along
 Joy to my soul, and vigour to my song:
 Absent from thee, the Poet's flame expires; 240
 But ah! how fiercely burn the Lover's fires?
 Gods! can no pray'rs, no sighs, no numbers move
 One savage heart, or teach it how to love?
 The winds my pray'rs, my sighs, my numbers bear,
 The flying winds have lost them all in air! 245
 Or when, alas! shall more auspicious gales
 To these fond eyes restore thy welcome sails!
 If you return—ah why these long delays?
 Poor Sappho dies while careless Phaon stays.
 O launch the bark, nor fear the wat'ry plain; 250
 Venus for thee shall smooth her native main.
 O launch thy bark, secure of prosp'rous gales;
 Cupid for thee shall spread the swelling sails.
 If you will fly—(yet ah! what cause can be,
 Too cruel youth, that you should fly from me?)
 If not from Phaon I must hope for ease, 256
 Ah let me seek it from the raging seas:
 To raging seas unpy'd I'll remove,
 And either cease to live or cease to love!

NOTES.

VER. 236. My Phaon] Fenton translated this epistle, but with a manifest inferiority to Pope. He added an original poem of his own, an epistle of Phaon to Sappho; which appears to be one of the feeblest in the collection of his poems, among which some are truly excellent.

On the whole, the epistle before us is translated by Pope with faithfulness and with elegance, and much excels any Dryden translated in the volume he published; several of which were done by some "of the mob of gentlemen that wrote with ease;" that is, Sir C. Scroop, Caryl, Pooley, Wright, Tate, Buckingham, Cooper, and other careless rhymers. Lord Somers translated Dido to Æneas, and Ariadne to Theseus. A good translation of these epistles is as much wanted as one of Juvenal; for out of sixteen satires of that poet Dryden himself translated but six. We can now boast of happy translations in verse of almost all the great poets of antiquity, whilst the French have been poorly contented with only prose translations of Homer and Horace; which, says Cervantes, can no more resemble the original than the wrong side of tapestry can represent the right. The inability of the French tongue to express many Greek or Roman ideas with facility and grace is here visible; but the Italians have Horace translated by Pallavacini, Theocritus by Riccolotti and Salvini, Ovid by Anguillara, the Æneid, admirably well, in blank verse, by Annibal Caro, and the Georgics, in blank verse also, by Daniello, and Lucretius by Marchetti.

One of the most learned commentaries on any classic is that of Mezeriac on the epistles of Ovid. It seems strange he should have employed so much labour on such a writer. The very best life of Æsop is also by Mezeriac; a book so scarce, that neither Bentley nor Bayle had seen it when they first wrote on Æsop. It was reprinted in the Memoires de Literature of M. De Sattengre 1717, t. i. p. 87. This is the author whom Malherbe, with his usual bluntness, asked, when he published his edition of Diophantus, "If it would lessen the price of bread?"

There was a very early translation of the epistles of Ovid ascribed to Shakespear, which error, like many others, has been rectified by that able and accurate enquirer, Dr Farmer, who has shewn that they were translated by Thomas Heywood, and inserted in his Britaine's Troy, 1609.

One of the best imitations of Ovid is a Latin epistle of the Count Balthasar Castiglione, author of the celebrated Courtier, addressed to his absent wife.

A R G U M E N T.

ABELARD and Eloisa flourished in the twelfth century; they were two of the most distinguished persons of their age in learning and beauty, but for nothing more famous than for their unfortunate passion. After a long course of calamities, they retired each to a several Convent, and consecrated the remainder of their days to religion. It was many years after this separation, that a letter of Abelard's to a Friend, which contained the history of his misfortune, fell into the hands of Eloisa. This awakening all her tenderness, occasioned those celebrated letters (out of which the following is partly extracted) which gave so lively a picture of the struggles of grace and nature, virtue and passion. P.

A Traveller who visited the Convent about the year 1768 (see Annual Register) says, that its situation and prospects by no means resemble Pope's beautiful and romantic description of it. Father St. Romain, the officiating Priest, walked with him round the whole demesne. The Abbess, who was in her eighty-second year, desired to see our Traveller, for she said she was his countrywoman, and allied to the extinct families of Lifford and Stafford. She was aunt to the then Duke de Rochfaulcault; and being fifth in succession, as Abbess of that Convent, hoped it would become a kind of patrimony. We know, alas! what has since happened both to her Family and her Convent! The community seemed to know but little of the afflicting story of their Founder. Little remains of the original building but a few pointed arches. In examining the tombs of these unfortunate lovers, he observed that Eloisa appeared much taller than Abelard.

ELOISA TO ABELARD*.

IN these deep solitudes and awful cells,
 Where heav'nly-pensive contemplation dwells,
 And ever-musing melancholy reigns;
 What means this tumult in a Vestal's veins?
 Why rove my thoughts beyond this last retreat? 5
 Why feels my heart its long-forgotten heat?
 Yet, yet I love!—From Abelard it came,
 And Eloisa yet must kiss the name.

Dear fatal name! rest ever unreveal'd,
 Nor pass these lips in holy silence seal'd: 10

NOTES.

* However happy and judicious the subject of this epistle may be thought to be, as displaying the various conflicts and tumults between duty and pleasure, between penitence and passion, that agitated the mind of Eloisa; yet, we must candidly own, that the principal circumstance of distress is of so indelicate a nature, that it is with difficulty disguised by the exquisite art and address of the poet. The capital and unrivalled beauties of the poem arise from the striking images and descriptions of the Convent, and from the sentiments drawn from the mystical books of devotion, particularly Madame Guion and the Archbishop of Cambray.

VER. 1. In these deep solitudes] These very beautiful lines appear truly to Lord Kaims to be faulty and exceptionable, on account of the pause that intervenes between the verb and the consequent substantive.

Hide it, my heart, within that close disguise,
Where mix'd with God's, his lov'd Idea lies :

O write it not, my hand—the name appears
Already written—wash it out, my tears !

In vain lost Eloïsa weeps and prays,

Her heart still dictates, and her hand obeys.

Relentless walls ! whose darksome round contains Repentant sighs, and voluntary pains :

Ye rugged rocks, which holy knees have worn ;

Ye grotts and caverns shagg'd with horrid thorn ! 20

Shrines ! where their vigils pale-ey'd virgins keep,

And pitying faints, whose statues learn to weep !

Tho' cold like you, unmov'd and silent grown,

I have not yet forgot myself to stone.

All is not Heav'n's while Abelard has part, 25

Still rebel nature holds out half my heart ;

Nor pray'rs nor fasts its stubborn pulse restrain,

Nor tears for ages taught to flow in vain.

Soon as thy letters trembling I unclose,

That well-known name awakens all my woes, 30

NOTES.

VER. 24. Forgot myself to stone] This is an expression of Milton ; as is also, caverns shagg'd with horrid thorn, and the epithets, pale-ey'd, twilight, low-thoughted care, and others, are first used in the smaller poems of Milton, which Pope seems to have been just reading.

Some of these circumstances, in the scenery view of the monastery, have perhaps a little impropriety when introduced into a place so lately founded as was the Paraclete ; but are so well imagined, and so highly painted, that they demand excuse.

VER. 25.] “Heav'n claims me all in vain, while he”—was the the former reading.

Oh name for ever sad! for ever dear!
 Still breath'd in sighs, still usher'd with a tear.
 I tremble too, where'er my own I find,
 Some dire misfortune follows close behind.
 Line after line my gushing eyes o'erflow, 35
 Led through a sad variety of woe:
 Now warm in love, now with'ring in my bloom,
 Lost in a convent's solitary gloom!
 There stern Religion quench'd th' unwilling flame,
 There dy'd the best of passions, Love and Fame. 40
 Yet write, oh write me all, that I may join
 Griefs to thy griefs, and echo sighs to thine.
 Nor foes nor fortune take this pow'r away;
 And is my Abelard less kind than they?
 Tears still are mine, and those I need not spare, 45
 Love but demands what else were shed in pray'r;
 No happier task these faded eyes pursue;
 To read and weep is all they now can do.
 Then share thy pain, allow that sad relief;
 Ah, more than share it, give me all thy grief. 50

NOTES.

VER. 40. Love and Fame] Fame is not a passion.

VER. 41. Yet write] This is taken from the Latin letters that passed betwixt Eloisa and Abelard, and which had been a few years before published in London by Rawlinson, and which our poet has copied and translated in many other passages: Per ipsum Christum obsecramus, quatenus ancillulas ipsius & tuas, crebris literis de his, in quibus adhuc fluctuas, naufragiis certificare digneris, ut nos saltem quæ tibi soli remansimus; doloris vel gaudii participes habeas. Epist. Heloissæ, p. 46. From the same also, the use of letters, ver. 51, is taken and amplified; and it is a little remarkable that this use of letters is in the fourth book of Diodorus Siculus.

Heav'n first taught letters for some wretch's aid,
 Some banish'd lover, or some captive maid ;
 They live, they speak, they breathe what love inspires,
 Warm from the soul, and faithful to its fires,
 The virgin's wish without her fears impart, 55
 Excuse the blush, and pour out all the heart,
 Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
 And waft a sigh from Indus to the Pole.

Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,
 When Love approach'd me under friendship's name ;
 My fancy form'd thee of angelic kind, 61
 Some emanation of th' all-beauteous Mind.
 Those smiling eyes, attemp'ring ev'ry ray,
 Shone sweetly lambent with celestial day.

Guilt-

NOTES.

VER. 63. Those smiling eyes] Abelard was reputed the most handsome, as well as the most learned man of his time, according to the kind of learning then in vogue. An old chronicle, quoted by Andrew du Chesne, informs us, that scholars flocked to his lectures from all quarters of the Latin world; and his cotemporary, St. Bernard, relates, that he numbered many principal ecclesiastics and cardinals at the court of Rome.—Abelard himself boasts, that when he retired into the country, he was followed by such immense crowds of scholars, that they could get neither lodgings nor provisions sufficient for them: “Ut nec locus hospitium, nec terra sufficeret alimentis.” (Abelardi, Opera, p. 19.) He met with the fate of many learned men, to be embroiled in controversy and accused of heresy; for St. Bernard, whose influence and authority was very great, got his opinion of the Trinity condemned, at a council held at Sens 1140. But the talents of Abelard were not confined to theology, jurisprudence, philosophy, and the thorny paths of scholasticism; he gave proofs of a lively genius by many poetical performances, insomuch, that he was reputed to be the author of the famous

Guiltless I gaz'd, heav'n listen'd while you sung ; 65
And truths divine came mended from that tongue.

From

famous Romance of the Rose ; which, however, was indisputably written by John of Meun, a little city on the banks of the Loire, about four leagues from Orleans ; which gave occasion to Marot to exclaim, De Jean de Meun s'enfle le cours de Loire. It was he who continued and finished the Romance of the Rose, which William de Loris had left imperfect forty years before. If chronology did not absolutely contradict the notion of Abelard's being the author of this very celebrated piece, yet are there internal arguments sufficient to confute it. The mistake seems to have flow'd from his having given Eloisa the name of Rose, in one of the many sonnets he address'd to her. In this romance there are many severe and satirical strokes on the character of Eloisa, which the pen of Abelard never would have given. In one passage she is introduced speaking with indecency and obscenity ; in another, all the vices and bad qualities of women are represented as assembled together in her alone :

Qui les mœurs féminins favoit,
Car tres-tous en soi les avoit.

In a very old epistle dedicatory, address'd to Philip the Fourth of France, by this same John of Meun, and prefixed to a French translation of Boetius, a very popular book at that time, it appears, that he also translated the Epistles of Abelard to Heloisa, which were in high vogue at the court. He mentions also, that he had translated Vegetius on the Art Military, and a book called the Wonders of Ireland. These works shew us the taste of the age. His words are : “ T'envoye ores Boece de Consolation, que j'ai translaté en François, jaçoit que bien entendes le Latin.

It is to be regretted that we have no exact picture of the person and beauty of Eloisa. Abelard himself says that she was “ Facie non infima.” Her extraordinary learning many circumstances concur to confirm ; particularly one, which is, that the Nuns of the Paraclete are wont to have the office of Whitsunday read to them in Greek, to perpetuate the memory of her understanding that language. The curious may not be displeas'd to be inform'd, that the Paraclete was built in the parish of Quincey, upon the little river of Arduzon,

From lips like those what precept fail'd to move?
 Too soon they taught me 'twas no sin to love:
 Back through the paths of pleasing sense I ran,
 Nor wish'd an Angel whom I lov'd a Man. 70
 Dim and remote the joys of saints I see;
 Nor envy them that heav'n I lose for thee.

How oft, when press'd to marriage, have I said,
 Curse on all laws but those which love has made?
 Love, free as air, at sight of human ties, 75
 Spreads his light wings, and in a moment flies.

NOTES.

Arduzon, near Nogent, upon the Seine. A lady, learned as was Eloisa in that age, who indisputably understood the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew tongues, was a kind of prodigy. Her literature, says Abelard, "in toto regno nominatissimam fecerat;" and, we may be sure, more thoroughly attached him to her. Buffy Rabutin speaks in high terms of commendation of the purity of Eloisa's Latinity; a judgment worthy a French Count! There is a force, but not an elegance, in her style, which is blemished, as might be expected by many phrases unknown to the pure ages of the Roman language, and by many Hebraisms, borrowed from the translation of the Bible.

VER. 66. And truths divine, &c.] He was her Preceptor in Philosophy and Divinity. W.

VER. 73. How oft] These extraordinary sentiments are plainly from the Letters: Nihil unquam, Deus scit, in te, nisi te requisivi; te purè, non tua concupiscens. Non matrimonii fœdera, non dotes aliquas expectavi. Et si uxoris nomen sanctius videtur, dulcius mihi semper extitit amicæ vocabulum, aut, si non indigneris, concubinæ vel scorti. Pope has added an injudicious thought about Cupid; mythology is here much out of its place.

 "When Maisterie comes, the Lord of Love anon
 "Flutters his wings, and forthwith is he gone."

Let

Let wealth, let honour, wait the wedded dame,
 August her deed, and sacred be her fame;
 Before true passion all those views remove;
 Fame, wealth, and honour! what are you to Love?
 The jealous God, when we profane his fires, 81
 Those restless passions in revenge inspires,
 And bids them make mistaken mortals groan,
 Who seek in love for aught but love alone.
 Should at my feet the world's great master fall, 85
 Himself, his throne, his world, I'd scorn 'em all;
 Not Caesar's empress would I deign to prove;
 No, make me mistress to the man I love;
 If there be yet another name more free,
 More fond than mistress, make me that to thee!
 Oh! happy state! when souls each other draw, 91
 When love is liberty, and nature, law:
 All then is full, possessing and possessed,
 No craving void left aking in the breast:
 Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips it part,
 And each warm wish springs mutual from the heart.
 This sure is bliss (if bliss on earth there be)
 And once the lot of Abelard and me.

Alas how chang'd! what sudden horrors rise!
 A naked Lover bound and bleeding lies! 100

NOTES.

VER. 88. Make me mistress] A great inaccuracy!—She was his wife.

VER. 100. A naked Lover] One cannot forbear wishing, that, notwithstanding all the dexterity and management our poet has exerted on the occasion, these six lines had been omitted.

Where, where was Eloïse? her voice, her hand!
 Her poniard had oppos'd the dire command.
 Barbarian, stay! that bloody stroke restrain!
 The crime was common, common be the pain.
 I can no more, by shame, by rage suppress'd, 105.
 Let tears, and burning blushes speak the rest.

Canst thou forget that sad, that solemn day,
 When victims at yon altar's foot we lay?
 Canst thou forget what tears that moment fell,
 When, warm in youth, I bade the world farewell?
 As with cold lips I kiss'd the sacred veil, 111
 The shrines all trembled, and the lamps grew pale:
 Heav'n scarce believ'd the Conquest it survey'd,
 And Saints with wonder heard the vows I made.
 Yet then, to those dread altars as I drew, 115
 Not on the Cross my eyes were fix'd, but you:
 Not grace, or zeal, love only was my call,
 And if I lose thy love, I lose my all.
 Come! with thy looks, thy words, relieve my woe;
 Those still at least are left thee to bestow. 120
 Still on that breast enamour'd let me lie,
 Still drink delicious poison from thy eye,

NOTES.

VER. 108. Yon altar's] The altar of Paraclete, says Mr. Berrington, did not then exist; they were not professed at the same time or place; one was at Argenteuil, the other at St. Denys.

VER. 111. As with cold lips] This description of the solemnity of her taking the veil, the prognostics that attended it, her passion intruding itself in the midst of her devotion, VER. 115; the sudden check to her passion, VER. 125; need not be pointed out to any reader of sensibility, and lover of true poetry.

Pant on thy lip, and to thy heart be press'd;
 Give all thou canst—and let me dream the rest.
 Ah no! instruct me other joys to prize, 125
 With other beauties charm my partial eyes,
 Full in my view set all the bright abode,
 And make my foul quit Abelard for God.

Ah think at least thy flock deserves thy care,
 Plants of thy hand, and children of thy pray'r, 130
 From the false world in early youth they fled,
 By thee to mountains, wilds, and deserts led.
 You rais'd these hallow'd walls; the desert smil'd,
 And Paradise was open'd in the Wild.
 No weeping orphan saw his father's stores 135
 Our shrines irradiate, or emblaze the floors;
 No silver faints, by dying misers giv'n,
 Here brib'd the rage of ill-requited heav'n:
 But such plain roofs as piety could raise,
 And only vocal with the Maker's praise. 140
 In these lone walls (their days eternal bound)
 These moss-grown domes with spiry turrets crown'd,

VER. 133. You rais'd these hallow'd walls] He founded the Monastery. P.

VER. 136. Our shrines irradiate] Non magis auro fulgentia atque ebore, simulacra, quàm lucos, & in iis silentia ipsa adoramus, says Pliny very finely of places of worship.

VER. 141. In these lone] All the images drawn from the Convent, from this line down to line 170, and particularly the personification of Melancholy, expanding her dreadful wings over its whole circuit, cannot be sufficiently applauded. The fine epithet, browner horror, is from Dryden. It is amusing to read with this passage

Where awful arches makes a noon-day night,
 And the dim windows shed a solemn light;
 Thy eyes diffus'd a reconciling ray, 145
 And gleams of glory brighten'd all the day.
 But now no face divine contentment wears,
 'Tis all blank sadness, or continual tears.
 See how the force of others pray'rs I try,
 (O pious fraud of am'rous charity!) 150
 But why should I on others pray'rs depend?
 Come thou, my father, brother, husband, friend?
 Ah let thy handmaid, sister, daughter move,
 And all those tender names in one, thy love!
 The darksome pines that o'er yon rocks reclin'd
 Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind, 156
 The wand'ring streams that shine between the hills,
 The grots that echo to the tinkling rills,

These exquisite lines will be highly relished by all those,

 To walk the studious cloysters pale,
 And love the high-embowed roof,
 With antic pillars massy-proof;
 And storied windows richly dight,
 Casting a dim religious light;
 Then let the pealing organ blow
 In the full-voic'd quire below;
 In service high and anthem clear,
 As may with sweetness through mine ear
 Dissolve me into extasies,
 And bring all heav'n before mine eyes.

But o'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
 Long founding isles, and intermingled graves,
 Black Melancholy sits, and round her throws 165
 A death-like silence, and a dread repose :
 Her gloomy presence saddens all the scene,
 Shades ev'ry flow'r, and darkens ev'ry green,
 Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
 And breathes a browner horror on the woods. 170

Yet here for ever, ever must I stay ;
 Sad proof how well a lover can obey !
 Death, only death, can break the lasting chain ;
 And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain,
 Here all its frailties, all its flames resign, 175
 And wait till 'tis no sin to mix with thine.

Ah wretch ! believ'd the spouse of God in vain,
 Confess'd within the slave of love and man.
 Assist me, heav'n ! but whence arose that pray'r ?
 Sprung it from piety, or from despair ? 180
 Ev'n here, where frozen chastity retires,
 Love finds an altar for forbidden fires,

NOTES.

VER. 177. Ah wretch !] From the Letters ; as also v. 133 ;
 and also v. 251 ; from the Letters. Epist. ii. p. 67.

VER. 182. An altar for forbidden fires] Ought we to depreciate and neglect the very interesting and pathetic Tale of Rousseau's Eloise, because many of his other writings are so objectionable ?

I ought to grieve, but cannot what I ought ;
 I mourn the lover, not lament the fault ;
 I view my crime, but kindle at the view, 185
 Repent old pleasures, and solicit new ;
 Now turn'd to heav'n, I weep my past offence,
 Now think of thee, and curse my innocence.
 Of all affliction taught a lover yet,
 'Tis sure the hardest science to forget ! 190
 How shall I lose the sin, yet keep the sense,
 And love th' offender, yet detest th' offence ?
 How the dear object from the crime remove,
 Or how distinguish penitence from love ?
 Unequal task ! a passion to resign, 195
 For hearts so touch'd, so pierc'd, so lost as mine.
 Ere such a soul regains its peaceful state,
 How often must it love, how often hate !
 How often hope, despair, resent, regret,
 Conceal, disdain,—do all things but forget. 200
 But let heav'n seize it, all at once 'tis fir'd ;
 Not touch'd, but rapt ; not waken'd, but inspir'd !

NOTES.

VER. 201. But let heav'n seize it] Here is the true doctrine of the Mystics, in which religion aids poetry. There are many such strains in Crashaw :

Happy soul ! she shall discover
 What joy, what bliss,
 How many heavens at once it is
 To have a God become a Lover !

And again, in a poem called The Flaming Heart, and in the Seraphical Saint Teresa in Crashaw, p. 195, all the tender feelings and sensibilities of an amorous virgin are applied to the Deity.

Oh

Oh come! oh teach me nature to subdue,
 Renounce my love, my life, myself—and you.
 Fill my fond heart with God alone, for he 205
 Alone can rival, can succeed to thee.

How happy is the blameless Vestal's lot?
 The world forgetting, by the world forgot:
 Eternal sun-shine of the spotless mind!
 Each pray'r accepted, and each wish resign'd;
 Labour and rest, that equal periods keep; 211
 "Obedient slumbers that can wake and weep;"
 Desires compos'd, affections ever even;
 Tears that delight, and sighs that waft to heav'n.
 Grace shines around her with sereneest beams, 215
 And whisp'ring Angels prompt her golden dreams.

VER. 212. Obedient slumbers, &c.] Taken from Crashaw. P.; whom also Milton honoured by borrowing some lines from his translation of Marino's Slaughter of the Innocents. See Crashaw in the Letters, vol. vii.

VER. 215. Grace shines around her] Here follows some of the maxims and reflections of Fenelon:—"God, in the beginning, disengages our hearts from impure pleasures by the taste he gives us of a heavenly delectation. Animated by the tender sentiments of a new-born love, we exercise ourselves with a noble and masculine vigour in all the labours of an active virtue. The soul, ravished with the divine amiableness, is no longer to be touched with the seducing charms of a profane sensuality.

"God then proceeds to another operation in us, in order to destroy the mistaken love of ourselves; and this not by pleasures, but by sufferings. After having weaned us from earthly objects, he shuts us up within the solitary prison of our own being, to the end that we may experience the darkness, the weakness, and the emptiness of it. He sets before our eyes all the secret abominations

For her th' unfading rose of Eden blooms,
 And wings of Seraphs shed divine perfumes,
 For her the Spouse prepares the bridal ring,
 For her white virgins Hymenaeals sing,

of our self-love, the impurity of those virtues that flow from it, and its usurpations upon the rights of the Divinity. What a source of torments must this be to a creature idolatrous of itself and of its own virtue! The soul finds nothing in itself that is worthy of its love; and being no longer able to endure its own society, flies away and forsakes itself to plunge and be swallowed up in the love of that object who alone is lovely.

“Then it is that the importunate noise of the senses and the imagination becomes hushed, the tumultuous hurry of our thoughts and passions ceases, and the whole soul being brought into a profound silence, adores him in spirit and in truth, whose perfections are beyond all expression, and above all conception. But this silence is such as excludes only useless reflections, superfluous reasonings, and barren speculations, which interrupt the action of the heart. In loving God purely, we believe every thing he teaches, we observe every thing he commands, we hope for every thing he promises. For this predominant charity produces, animates, and perfects in us all the virtues, human and divine.”—For such opinions as these was the mild and amiable Fenelon condemned, at the instigation and by the intrigues of Bossuet, a violent and artful high-churchman, by the court of Rome; and, with an unexampled tone of modesty and submission, publickly confessed his errors in his own Cathedral Church. Read some delicate strokes of satire on the Mystics and Quietists in the 12th Epistle of Boileau Sur l'Amour de Dieu, and in his 10th Satire.

VER. 218. Wings of Seraphs] A late poet, speaking of a Hermit at his evening prayers, says beautifully:

Then, as my taper waxes dim,
 Chant ere I sleep my measur'd hymn;
 And, at the close, the gleams behold,
 Of parting wings bedropt with gold.

VER. 219. For her] Copied exactly from the opinions and ideas of the Mystics and Quietists. There were but six Vestal Virgins at Rome; and it was with great difficulty the number was kept up,
 from

To founds of heav'nly harps she dies away,
And melts in visions of eternal day.

Far other dreams my erring soul employ,
Far other raptures, of unholy joy:

When at the close of each sad, sorrowing day, 225

Fancy restores what vengeance snatch'd away,

Then conscience sleeps, and leaving nature free,

All my loose soul unbounded springs to thee:

Oh curst, dear horrors of all-conscious night!

How glowing guilt exalts the keen delight! 230

Provoking Demons all restraint remove,

And stir within me ev'ry source of love.

I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,

And round thy phantom glue my clasping arms.

I wake:—no more I hear, no more I view, 235

The phantom flies me, as unkind as you.

I call aloud; it hears not what I say:

I stretch my empty arms; it glides away.

To dream once more I close my willing eyes;

Ye soft illusions, dear deceits, arise; 240

Alas, no more! methinks we wand'ring go

Through dreary wastes, and weep each other's woe.

NOTES.

from the dread of the punishment for violating the vow, which was to be interred alive.

VER. 241. Methinks we wand'ring] I have been sometimes inclined to think, that some vision more appropriated, and drawn from her peculiar distress, would have been more striking. Virgil adds to Dido's dream a circumstance beautifully drawn from her own story:

And seeks her Tyrians o'er the waste in vain.

Where

Where round some mould'ring tow'r pale ivy creeps,
 And low-brow'd rocks hang nodding o'er the deeps.
 Sudden you mount, you beckon from the skies; 245
 Clouds interpose, waves roar, and winds arise.
 I shriek, start up, the same sad prospect find,
 And wake to all the griefs I left behind.

For thee the fates, severely kind, ordain
 A cool suspense from pleasure and from pain; 250
 Thy life a long dead calm of fix'd repose;
 No pulse that riots, and no blood that glows.
 Still as the sea, ere winds were taught to blow,
 Or moving spirit bade the waters flow;
 Soft as the slumbers of a faint forgiv'n, 255
 And mild as op'ning gleams of promis'd heav'n.

Come, Abelard! for what hast thou to dread?
 The torch of Venus burns not for the dead.
 Nature stands check'd; Religion disapproves;
 Ev'n thou art cold—yet Eloïsa loves. 260
 Ah hopeless, lasting flames; like those that burn
 To light the dead, and warm th' unfruitful urn.

What scenes appear where'er I turn my view?
 The dear Ideas, where I fly, pursue,
 Rise in the grove, before the altar rise, 265
 Stain all my soul, and wanton in my eyes.
 I waste the Matin lamp in sighs for thee,
 Thy image steals between my God and me,
 Thy voice I seem in ev'ry hymn to hear,
 With ev'ry bead I drop too soft a tear. 270

When

When from the center clouds of fragrance roll,
 And swelling organs lift the rising soul,
 One thought of thee puts all the pomp to flight,
 Priests, tapers, temples, swim before my sight :
 In seas of flame my plunging soul is drown'd, 275
 While Altars blaze, and Angels tremble round.

While prostrate here in humble grief I lie,
 Kind, virtuous drops just gath'ring in my eye,
 While praying, trembling, in the dust I roll,
 And dawning grace is op'ning on my soul : 280
 Come, if thou dar'st, all charming as thou art !
 Oppose thyself to heav'n ; dispute my heart ;
 Come, with one glance of those deluding eyes
 Blot out each bright Idea of the skies ;
 Take back that grace, those sorrows, and those tears ;
 Take back my fruitless penitence and pray'rs ; 286
 Snatch me, just mounting, from the blest abode ;
 Assist the fiends, and tear me from my God !
 No, fly me, fly me, far as Pole from Pole ;
 Rise Alps between us ! and whole oceans roll ? 290
 Ah, come not, write not, think not once of me,
 Nor share one pang of all I felt for thee.
 Thy oaths I quit, thy memory resign ;
 Forget, renounce me, hate whate'er was mine.

NOTES.

VER. 274. Priests, tapers, temples,] Equal to any part of Sappho's Ode, so celebrated by Longinus for an assemblage of striking circumstances.

Fair eyes, and tempting looks (which yet I view!) 295
 Long lov'd, ador'd ideas, all adieu!

Oh Grace serene! oh virtue heav'nly fair!

Divine oblivion of low-thoughted care!

Fresh-blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky!

And Faith, our early immortality! 300

Enter, each mild, each amicable guest;

Receive, and wrap me, in eternal rest!

See in her cell sad Eloïsa spread,

Propt on some tomb, a neighbour of the dead: 305

In each low wind methinks a Spirit calls,

And more than Echoes talk along the walls.

Here, as I watch'd the dying lamps around,

From yonder shrine I heard a hollow sound.

“Come, sister, come! (it said, or seem'd to say)

“Thy place is here, sad sister, come away; 310

“Once like thyself, I trembled, wept, and pray'd,

“Love's victim then, tho' now a fainted maid:

“But all is calm in this eternal sleep;

“Here grief forgets to groan, and love to weep,

“Ev'n superstition loses every fear: 315

“For God, not man, absolves our frailties here.”

NOTES.

VER. 298. Low-thoughted care] An epithet from Milton's Comus.

VER. 303. See in her cell] It certainly should be near, not in her cell. The doors of all cells open into the common cloister, where are often many tombs.

VER. 308. A hollow sound] Though Virgil evidently gave the hint: Hinc exaudiri voces & verba vocantis visa viri, l. 4. p. 460.; yet this call of some sister, that had been involved in a similar distress, appears more solemn and interesting.

I come,

I come, I come! prepare your roseate bow'rs,
 Celestial palms, and ever-blooming flow'rs.
 Thither, where finners may have rest, I go,
 Where flames refin'd in breasts seraphic glow: 320
 Thou, Abelard! the last sad office pay,
 And smooth my passage to the realms of day:
 See my lips tremble, and my eye-balls roll,
 Suck my last breath and catch my flying soul!
 Ah no—in sacred vestments may'st thou stand, 325
 The hallow'd taper trembling in thy hand,
 Present the Cross before my lifted eye,
 Teach me at once, and learn of me to die.
 Ah then, thy once-lov'd Eloïsa see!
 It will be then no crime to gaze on me. 330
 See from my cheek the transient roses fly!
 See the last sparkle languish in my eye!
 'Till every motion, pulse, and breath be o'er;
 And ev'n my Abelard be lov'd no more.
 Oh Death all-eloquent! you only prove 335
 What dust we doat on, when 'tis man we love.
 Then too, when fate shall thy fair frame destroy,
 (That cause of all my guilt, and all my joy)
 In trance extatic may thy pangs be drown'd,
 Bright clouds descend, and Angels watch thee round,
 From op'ning skies may streaming glories shine, 341
 And Saints embrace thee with a love like mine.

NOTES.

VER. 339.] These circumstances are conformable to the notions of mystic devotion. The death of St. Jerome is finely and forcibly painted by Dominichino, with such attendant particulars.

May one kind grave unite each hapless name,
And graft my love immortal on thy fame!

NOTES.

VER. 343. May one kind grave] This wish was fulfilled. The body of Abelard, who died twenty years before Eloisa, was sent to Eloisa, who interred it in the monastery of the Paraclete; and it was accompanied with a very extraordinary form of absolution, from the famous Peter de Clugny: "Ego Petrus Cluniacensis abbas, qui Petrum Abelardum in monachum Cluniacensem recepi, & corpus ejus furtim delatum Heloissæ Abbatisæ & monialibus Paracleti concessi, auctoritate omnipotentis Dei, & omnium sanctorum, absolvo eum, pro officio, ab omnibus peccatis suis." (Epist. Abæl. & Heloiss. p. 238.) "Eloisa herself, says Vigneul Marville (Melanges, t. ii. p. 55), solicited for this absolution; and Peter de Clugny willingly granted it. On what it could be founded, I leave to our learned theologians to determine. In certain ages opinions have prevailed for which no solid reason can be given." When Eloisa died in 1163, she was interred by the side of her beloved husband. I must not forget to mention, for the sake of those who are fond of modern miracles, that when she was put into the grave, Abelard stretched out his arms to receive her, and closely embraced her.

Madam de Rochefaucault, the late abbess of Paraclete, requested an inscription from the Parisian Academy of Belles Letters in the year 1766 for the tomb of these celebrated lovers, which has been since put up by Madam de Roucy, her successor:

Hic

Sub eodem marmore jacent

Then,

Then, ages hence, when all my woes are o'er, 345
 When this rebellious heart shall beat no more;
 If ever chance two wand'ring lovers brings
 To Paraclete's white walls and silver springs,
 O'er the pale marble shall they join their heads,
 And drink the falling tears each other sheds; 350
 Then sadly say, with mutual pity mov'd,
 " Oh may we never love as these have lov'd!"
 From the full choir when loud Hosannas rise,
 And swell the pomp of dreadful sacrifice,
 Amid that scene if some relenting eye 355
 Glance on the stone where our cold relics lie,
 Devotion's self shall steal a thought from heav'n,
 One human tear shall drop, and be forgiv'n.

And

NOTES.

VER. 358. And be forgiv'n.] With this line it appears, at first sight, that the poem should have ended; for the eight additional verses, concerning some poet that might arise to sing their misfortune, are rather languid and flat, and might stand, it should seem, for the conclusion of almost any story, were we not informed, as I have credibly been, that they were added by the poet in allusion to his own case, and the state of his own mind. For what determined him in the choice of the subject of this epistle was the retreat of that lady into a nunnery, whose death he had so pathetically lamented in the foregoing elegy.

Dr. Johnson's assertion does not seem to be true, that Eloisa and Abelard found quiet and consolation in retirement and piety.

I will just add, that many lines in this epistle are taken from various parts of Dryden, particularly the following ones:

- " A day for ever sad, for ever dear—
- " Now warm in love, now withering in the grave—
- " And own no laws but those which love ordains—
- " And Paradise was open'd in his face—

" His

And sure if fate some future bard shall join
 In sad similitude of griefs to mine, 360
 Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
 And image charms he must behold no more;
 Such if there be, who loves so long, so well;
 Let him our sad, our tender story tell;
 The well-fung woes will sooth my pensive ghost; 365
 He best can paint 'em who shall feel 'em most.

NOTES.

“ His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace—

“ She hugg'd th' offender, and forgave th' offence—

“ I come without delay; I come”—

And the two fine verses, 323 and 324, are certainly taken from Oldham on the death of Adonis :

Kiss, while I watch thy swimming eye-balls roll,

Watch thy last gasp, and catch thy springing soul !

THE TEMPLE OF FAME.

WRITTEN IN THE YEAR MDCXXI.

A D V E R T I S E M E N T.

THE hint of the following piece was taken from Chaucer's House of Fame. The design is in a manner entirely altered, the descriptions and most of the particular thoughts my own: yet I could not suffer it to be printed without this acknowledgement. The reader who would compare this with Chaucer, may begin with his third Book of Fame, there being nothing in the two first books that answers to their title: wherever any hint is taken from him, the passage itself is set down in the marginal notes.

P.

It was thought proper to preserve the following note, which was prefixed to the first edition of this poem:

Some modern critics, from a pretended refinement of taste, have declared themselves unable to relish allegorical poems. It is not easy to penetrate into the meaning of this criticism; for if fable be allowed one of the chief beauties, or, as Aristotle calls it, the very soul of poetry, it is hard to comprehend how that fable should be the less valuable for having a moral. The ancients constantly made use of allegories. My Lord Bacon has composed an express treatise in proof of this, entitled, The Wisdom of the Ancients; where the reader may see several particular fictions exemplified and explained with great clearness, judgement, and learning. The incidents, indeed, by which the allegory is conveyed, must be varied according to the different genius or manners of different times; and they should never be spun too long, or too much clogged with trivial circumstances, or little particularities. We find an uncommon charm in truth, when it is conveyed by this sideway to our understanding; and it is observable, that even in the most ignorant ages this way of writing has found reception. Almost all the poems in the old Provençal had this turn; and from these it was that Petrarch took the idea of his poetry. We have his Trionfi in this kind; and Boccace pursued in the same track.

Soon after Chaucer introduced it here, whose Romaunt of the Rose, Court of Love, Flower and the Leaf, House of Fame, and some others of his writings, are master-pieces of this sort. In epic poetry, it is true; too nice and exact a pursuit of the allegory is justly esteemed a fault; and Chaucer had the discernment to avoid it in his Knight's Tale, which was an attempt towards an epic poem. Ariosto, with less judgement, gave entirely into it in his Orlando; which, though carried to an excess, had yet so much reputation in Italy, that Tasso (who reduced heroic poetry to the juster standard of the ancients) was forced to prefix to his work a scrupulous explanation of the allegory of it, to which the fable itself could scarce have directed his readers. Our countryman, Spencer, followed, whose poem is almost entirely allegorical, and imitates the manner of Ariosto rather than that of Tasso. Upon the whole, one may observe this sort of writing (however discontinued of late) was in all times so far from being rejected by the best poets, that some of them have rather erred by insisting on it too closely, and carrying it too far; and that to infer from thence that the allegory itself is vicious, is a presumptuous contradiction to the judgement and practice of the greatest geniuses, both ancient and modern.

NOTES.

* It was to the Italians we owed any thing that could be called poetry; from whom Chaucer, imitated by Pope in this vision, copied largely, as they are said to have done from the bards of Provence, and to which Italians he is perpetually owing his obligations, particularly to Boccace and Petrarch. But Petrarch had greater advantages, which Chaucer wanted, not only in the friendship and advices of Boccace, but still more in having found such a predecessor as Dante. In the year 1359, Boccace sent to Petrarch, who, it seems, was jealous of Dante, and in the answer speaks coldly of his merits. This circumstance, unobserved by the generality of writers, and even by Fontanini, Crescembini, and Muratori, is brought forward, and related at large in the third volume (p. 507.) of the very entertaining Memoirs of the Life of Petrarch. In the year 1363, Boccace, driven from Florence by the plague, visited Petrarch at Venice, and carried with him Leontius Pilatus, of Thessalonica, a man of genius, but of haughty, rough, and brutal manners. From this singular man, who perished in a voyage from Constantinople to Venice 1365, Petrarch received a Latin translation of the Iliad and Odyssy. Muratori, in his first book, Della Perfetta Poesia, p. 18. relates, that a very few years after the death of Dante, 1321, a most curious work on the Italian poetry was written by a M. A. di Tempo, of which he had seen a manuscript in the great library at Milan, of the year 1332, and

As balmy sleep had charm'd my cares to rest, and of which this is the title: Incipit Summa Artis Ritmici vulgaris dictaminis. The chapters are thus divided: Ritmorum vulgarium Septem sunt genera; 1. Est Sonetus; 2. Ballata; 3. Cantio extensa; 4. Rotundellus; 5. Mandrialis; 6. Serventesius; 7. Molus Confectus. But whatever Chaucer might copy from the Italians, yet the artful and entertaining plan of his Canterbury Tales was purely original and his own. This admirable piece, even exclusive of its poetry, is highly valuable, as it preserves to us the liveliest and exactest picture of the manners, customs, characters, and habits, of our forefathers, whom he has brought before our eyes acting as on a stage, suitably to their different orders and employments. With these portraits the driest antiquary must be delighted. By this plan, he has more judiciously connected these stories which the guests relate, than Boccace has done his novels: whom he has imitated, if not excelled, in the variety of the subjects of his tales. It is a common mistake, that Chaucer's excellence lay in his manner of treating light and ridiculous subjects; for whoever will attentively consider the noble poem of Palamon and Arcite, will be convinced that he equally excels in the pathetic, and the sublime. It has been but lately proved, that the Palamon and Arcite of Chaucer, is taken from the Teseide of Boccace, a poem which has been, till within a few years past, strangely neglected and unknown, and of which Mr. Tyrwhitt has given a curious and exact summary, in his Dissertation on the Canterbury Tales, vol. iv. p. 135. I cannot forbear expressing my surprize, that the circumstance of Chaucer's borrowing this tale, should have remained so long unobserved, when it is so plainly and positively mentioned in a book so very common as the Memoirs of Niceron; who says, t. 33. p. 44. after giving an abstract of the story of Palamon and Arcite, G. Chaucer, l'Homere de son pays, a mis l'ouvrage de Boccace en vers Anglois. This book was published by Niceron 1736. He also mentions a French translation of the Teseide, published at Paris, M. D. CC. 1597, in 12mo. The late Mr. Hans Stanley, who was as accurately skilled in modern as in ancient Greek, for a long time was of opinion, that this poem, in modern political Greek verses, was the original ; in which opinion he was confirmed by the Abbé Barthelmy, at Paris, whose learned correspondence with Mr. Stanley on this subject I have read. At last Mr. Stanley gave up this opinion, and was convinced that Boccaccio invented the tale. Crescembini and Muratori have mentioned the Teseide more than once. That very laborious and learned antiquary Apostolo Zeno, speaks thus of it in his notes to the Bibliotheca of Fontanini, p. 450. t. i. Questa opera pastorale (that is, the Ameto) che prende il nome dal pastore Ameto, ha data l'origine all'egloga Italiana, non senza lode del Boccaccio, a cui pure la nostra lingua deve il ritrovamento della ottava rima (which was first used in the Teseide), e del poema eroico. Gravina does not mention this poem. Crescembini gives this opinion of it, p. 118. t. i. Nel medesimo secolo del Petrarca, il Boccaccio diede principio all'Epica, colla sua Teseide, e col Filostrato ; ma nello stile non accede la mediocrità, anzi sovente cadde nell'umile. The fashion that has lately obtained, in all the nations of Europe, of republishing and illustrating their old Poets, does honour to the good taste and liberal curiosity of the present age. It is always pleasing, and indeed useful, to look back to the rude beginnings of any art brought to a greater degree of elegance and grace.

Aurea nunc, olim sylvestribus horrida dumis. VIRG.

VER. I. In that soft season, &c.] This Poem is introduced in the manner of the Provencal Poets, whose works were for the most part Visions, or pieces of imagination, and constantly descriptive. From these Petrarch and Chaucer frequently borrow the idea of their poems, See the Trionfi of the former, and the Dream, Flower and the Leaf, &c. of the latter. The author of this therefore chose the same sort of exordium. P.

VER. II. I flood,] This poem was elegantly translated into French by Madame du Boccage, who also wrote three poems of the epic kind : The Paradise, from Milton ; the Death of Abel, from Gesner ; and the Exploits of Columbus, in ten cantos.

In air self-balanc'd hung the globe below,
 Where mountains rise, and circling oceans flow;
 Here naked rocks, and empty wastes were seen, 15
 There tow'ry cities, and the forests green,
 Here sailing ships delight the wand'ring eyes;
 There trees, and intermingled temples rise:
 Now a clear sun the shining scene displays,
 The transient landscape now in clouds decays. 20

O'er the wide Prospect as I gaz'd around,
 Sudden I heard a wild promiscuous sound,
 Like broken thunders that at distance roar,
 Or billows murm'ring on the hollow shore:
 Then gazing up, a glorious pile beheld, 25
 Whose tow'ring summit ambient clouds conceal'd.

 Steep its ascent, and slipp'ry was the way;

NOTES.

VER. 27. High on a rock] Milton, in his poem on the Fifth of November, (Works, vol. ii. p. 506. v. 170.), has introduced a description of the Temple or Tower of Fame, copied from the 12th book of Ovid's Metamorphosis, v. 39. and from this vision of Chaucer, with the addition of many circumstances and images.

mentioned? My purpose in animadverting so frequently as I have done on this species of false thoughts, is to guard the reader, especially of the younger sort, from being betrayed by the authority of so correct a writer as Pope into such specious and false refinements of style. For the same reason the opposition of ideas, in the three last words of the following line, may be condemned :

“ And legislators seem to think in stone.”

. VER. 53. So Zembla's rocks] A real lover of painting will not be contented with a single view and examination of this beautiful winter-piece; but will return to it again and again with fresh delight. The images are distinct, and the epithets lively and appropriated, especially the words, pale, unfelt, impassive, incumbent, gather'd. The reader may consult Thomson's Winter, v. 905.

NOTES.

VER. 65. Four faces had the dome, &c.] The temple is described to be square, the four fronts with open gates facing the different quarters of the world, as an intimation that all nations of the earth may alike be received into it. The western front is of Grecian architecture: the Doric order was peculiarly sacred to Heroes and Worthies. Those whose statues are after mentioned, were the first names of old Greece in arms and arts. P.

VER. 81. There great Alcides, &c.] This figure of Hercules is drawn with an eye to the position of the famous statue of Farnese. P.

It were to be wished, that our author, whose knowledge and taste of the fine arts were unquestionable, had taken more pains in describing so famous a statue as that of the Farnesian Hercules, to which he plainly refers, for he has omitted the characteristical excellencies of this famous piece of Grecian workmanship; namely, the uncommon breadth of the shoulders, the knottyness and spaciousness of the chest *, the firmness and protuberance of the muscles in each limb, particularly the legs, and the majestic vastness of the whole figure, undoubtedly designed by the artist to give a full idea of strength, as the Venus de Medicis of Beauty. These were the "invicti membra Glyconis," which, it is probable, Horace proverbially alluded to in his first epistle, v. 30. The name of Glycon is to this day preserved on the base of the figure as the maker of it; and as the virtuosi, customarily in speaking of a picture or statue, call it their Raphael or Bernini, why should not Horace, in common speech, use the name of the workman instead of the work? To mention the Hesperian apples, which the artist flung backwards, and almost concealed as an inconsiderable object, and which therefore scarcely appear in the statue, was below the notice of Pope.

VER. 85. Amphion there the loud] It may be imagined that these expressions are too bold; and a phlegmatic critic might ask, how it was possible to see, in sculpture, arches bending and towers growing? But the best writers, in speaking of pieces of painting and sculpture, use the present or imperfect tense, and talk of the things as really doing, to give a force to the description.

Thus Virgil:

—— "Gallos in limine adesse canebat."

—— "Incedunt victæ longo ordine gentes,

Quam variæ linguis, habitu tam vestis et armis."

As Pliny says that Clefilochus painted "Jovem muliebritero ingemiscendum." And Homer, in his beautiful and lively description of the shield,

And again,

In another place,

————— Δίονε ὑπο καλον αἰδε.

Upon which Clarke has made an observation that surprises me :
"Sed quomodo in scuto Depingi potuit, quem caneret citharista?"

This passage must not be parted with, till we have observed the artful rest upon the first syllable of the second verse :

"Amphion there the loud creating lyre Strikes."

There are many instances of such judicious pauses in Homer :

Αὐτὰρ ἐπεὶ τ' αὐλοῖσι βέλους ἐχέπευκας ἐφίειε
Βαλλ'.

And in Milton,

"As over them triumphant Death his dart

———— "Others on the grass

And of his blindness,

———— "But not to me returns Day."

In the spirited speech of Satan,

———— "All good to me becomes Bane."

These monosyllables have much force and energy; the Latin language does not admit of such. Virgil therefore, who so well understood and copied all the secret arts and charms of Homer's

VER. 88. Mountain rolls] Dennis idly objected to these lines, because motion cannot be represented in sculpture. But Virgil in his Shield uses such; but in one instance, perhaps, he carries it too far:

———— Mulcere alternos.

Motion may be represented, but not change of motion.

VER. 96. And the great founder of the Persian name:] Cyrus was the beginning of the Persian, as Ninus was of the Assyrian monarchy. The Magi and Chaldeans (the chief of whom was Zoroaster) employed their studies upon magic and astrology, which was in a manner almost all the learning of the ancient Asian people. We have scarce any account of a moral philosopher except Confucius, the great lawgiver of the Chinese, who lived about two thousand years ago. P.

NOTES.

VER. 101. These stop'd the moon,] These superstitions of the East are highly striking to the imagination. Since the time that poetry has been forced to assume a more sober, and perhaps a more rational air, it scarcely ventures to enter the fairy regions. There are some, however, who think it has suffered by deserting these fields of fancy, and by totally laying aside the descriptions of magic and enchantment. What an exquisite picture has Thomson given us in his delightful Castle of Indolence :

“ As when a shepherd of the Hebrid isles,
 Plac'd far amid the melancholy main,
 (Whether it be lone fancy him beguiles,
 Or that aerial beings sometimes deign
 To stand, embodied, to our senses plain)
 Sees on the naked hill, or valley low,
 The whilst in ocean Phœbus dips his wain,
 A vast assembly moving to and fro,
 Then all at once in air dissolves the wonderous show.”

CASTLE OF INDOLENCE, Stan. xxx. b. i.

I cannot at present recollect any solitude so romantic, or peopled with beings so proper to the place and the spectator. The mind naturally loves to lose itself in one of these wildernesses, and to forget the hurry, the noise, and splendor of more polished life ; as in the following beautiful stanza of The Minstrel :

“ In the deep windings of the grove, no more
 The hag obscene, and grisly phantom dwell ;
 Nor in the fall of mountain-stream, or roar
 Of winds, is heard the angry spirits yell ;
 No wizard mutters the tremendous spell,
 Nor sinks convulsive in prophetic swoon,
 Nor bids the noise of drums and trumpets swell,
 To ease of fancied pangs the labouring moon,
 Or chase the shade that blots the blazing orb of noon.”

MINSTREL.

 And airy spectres skim before their eyes ;
 Of Talismans and Sigils knew the pow'r, 105
 And careful watch'd the Planetary hour.
 Superior, and alone, Confucius stood,
 Who taught that useful science, to be good.
 But on the South, a long majestic race
 Of Egypt's Priests the gilded niches grace, 110
 Who measur'd earth, describ'd the starry spheres,
 And trac'd the long records of lunar years.
 High on his car Sesostris struck my view,
 Whom scepter'd slaves in golden harness drew :
 His hands a bow and pointed jav'lin hold ; 115
 His giant limbs are arm'd in scales of gold.

NOTES.

VER. 107. Confucius stood,] Congfutzee, for that was his name, flourished about two thousand three hundred years ago, just before Pythagoras. He taught justice, obedience to parents, humility, and universal benevolence ; and he practised these virtues when he was a first minister, and when he was reduced to poverty and exile. His family still exists in China, and is highly honoured and respected. The Chinese religion, government, and arts, have been too much magnified by some writers, and too much lessened by others. We may expect an accurate account of this wonderful country from the candour, ability, integrity, and justice, of the late ambassador, Lord Macartney.

VER. 110. Egypt's Priests, &c.] The learning of the old Egyptian Priests consisted for the most part in geometry and astronomy ; they also preserved the history of their nation. Their greatest hero upon record is Sesostris, whose actions and conquests may be seen at large in Diodorus, &c. He is said to have caused the kings he vanquished to draw him in his chariot. The posture of his statue, in these verses, is correspondent to the description which Herodotus gives of one of them remaining in his own time. P.

NOTES.

VER. 119. Of Gothic structure was the Northern side,] The Architecture is agreeable to that part of the world. The learning of the northern nations lay more obscure than that of the rest; Zamolxis was the disciple of Pythagoras, who taught the immortality of the soul to the Scythians. Odin, or Woden, was the great legislator and hero of the Goths. They tell us of him, that, being subject to fits, he persuaded his followers, that during those trances he received inspirations, from whence he dictated his laws: he is said to have been the inventor of the Runic characters. P.

This rude nation had great ideas. When Alaric their king was buried in Calabria, 410, they turned the course of the river Valento where it was most rapid; and having dug a very deep grave in this river's bed, there interred their revered prince, with many rich suits of armour, and much gold and precious stones. They then turned the river back into its usual course, and killed on the spot all that had assisted at this work, that the place of his interment might never be discovered.

VER. 122. Runic characters] The Gothic mythology by being more nobly wild, is more affecting to the imagination than the classical. The magicians of Ariosto, Tasso, and Spenser, have more powerful spells than those of Apollonius, Seneca, and Lucan. The enchanted forest of Ifmeno is more awfully and tremendously poetical than even the grove which Cæsar in Lucan orders to be cut down, b. iii. v. 400. What a group of dreadful images do we meet with in the Edda. Hence are drawn those thrilling numbers which Gray has given us in his Desert of Odin; an ode, which I think with Lord Orford (who is himself great in this very species of imagery) equal to any of Gray's. Hence also has our dramatic poetry been enriched with the druidical charac-

VER. 162. Timoleon, glorious in his brother's blood ;] Timoleon had saved the life of his brother Timophanes in the battle between the Argives and Corinthians ; but afterwards killed him when he affected the tyranny, preferring his duty to his country to all the obligations of blood. P.

VER. 162. Timoleon, glorious] Mr. Harte told me our author had once intended to write an epic poem on the story of Timoleon ; and it is remarkable that Dr. Akenfide had the same design ; he hints at it himself in the last stanza of the thirteenth ode, b. i. on lyric poetry :

“ But when from envy and from death to claim,

 When to throw incense on the vestal flame

NOTES.

VER. 178. But in the centre] The six persons Pope thought proper to select, as worthy to be placed on these pillars as the highest seats of honour, are Homer, Virgil, Pindar, Horace, Aristotle, and Tully. It is observable that our author has omitted the great dramatic poets of Greece. Sophocles and Euripides deserved certainly an honourable niche in the Temple of Fame as much as Pindar and Horace. But the truth is, it was not fashionable in Pope's time, nor among his acquaintance, attentively to study these poets. By a strange fatality they have not in this kingdom obtained the rank they deserve amongst classic writers. We have numberless treatises on Horace and Virgil, for instance, who in their different kinds do not surpass the authors in question, whilst hardly a critic among us has professedly pointed out their excellencies.

I own I have some particular reasons for thinking that our author was not very conversant in this sort of composition, having no inclination to the drama. In a note on the third book of his Homer, where Helen points out to Priam the names and characters of the Grecian leaders from the walls of Troy, he observes, that several great poets have been engaged by the beauty of this passage to an imitation of it. But who are the poets he enumerates on this occasion? Only Statius and Tasso; the former of whom, in his seventh book, and the latter in his third, shews the forces and the commanders that invested the cities of Thebes and Jerusalem. Not a syllable is mentioned of that capital scene in the Phœnissæ of Euripides, from the hundred and twentieth to the two hundredth line, where the old man standing with Antigone on the walls of Thebes, marks out to her the various figures, habits, armour, and qualifications of each different warrior, in the most lively and picturesque manner, as they appear in the camp beneath them.

VER. 188. The wars of Troy] The poems of Homer afford a marvellous variety of subjects proper for history-painting. A very ingenious French nobleman, the Count de Caylus, has lately printed a valuable treatise, entitled, “Tableaux tirés de l’Illiade, et de l’Odyssée d’Homere ;” in which he has exhibited the whole series of events contained in these poems, arranged in their proper order ; has designed each piece, and disposed each figure, with much taste and judgement. He seems justly to wonder, that artists have so seldom had recourse to this great store-house of beautiful and noble images, so proper for the employment of the pencils, and delivered with so much force and distinctness, that the painter has nothing to do but to substitute his colours for the words of Homer. He complains that a Raphael, and a Julio Romano, should copy the crude and unnatural conceptions of Ovid’s Metamorphoses

Among the few who borrowed their subjects from Homer, he mentions Bouchardon with the honour he deserves, and relates the following anecdote: "This great artist having lately read Homer in an old and detestable French translation, came one day to me, his eyes sparkling with fire, and said, 'Since I have read this book, men seem to be fifteen feet high, and all nature is enlarged in my sight.'"

Pope has selected from Homer only three subjects as the most interesting: Diomed wounding Venus, Hector slaying Patroclus, and the same Hector dragged along at the wheels of Achilles's chariot. Are these the most affecting and striking incidents of the Iliad? But it is highly worth remarking, that this very incident of dragging the body of Hector thrice round the walls of Troy is absolutely not mentioned by Homer. Bayle has remarked this; and Heyne acknowledges the truth of the remark, and thinks that Virgil, for he first mentioned it,

In the sublime, as in great affluence of fortune, some minute and unimportant articles will unavoidably escape observation. But it is almost impossible for a low and groveling genius to be guilty of error, since he never endangers himself by soaring on high, or aiming at eminence, but still goes on in the same quiet, uniform, and secure tract, whilst its very height and grandeur exposes the sublime to sudden falls. "Notwithstanding which trivial blemishes, I must ever remain in the opinion, that the greater excellencies, these bolder and nobler flights, though perhaps not carried on every where with an equality of perfection, yet merit the prize and preference, by the sole merit of their intrinsic magnificence and grandeur." This just and forcible sentiment of Longinus, in his thirty-third section, is a sufficient answer to an outrageous paradox lately advanced by Voltaire, in direct contradiction to his former critical opinions, and which is here set down for the entertainment tainment of the reader : “ If we would weigh, without prejudice, the Odyssy of Homer with the Orlando of Ariosto, the Italian must gain the preference in all respects. Both of them are chargeable with the same fault ; namely, an intemperance and luxuriance of imagination, and a romantic fondness for the marvellous. But Ariosto has compensated this fault by allegories so true, by touches of satire so delicate, by so profound a knowledge of the human heart, by the graces of the comic, which perpetually succeed the strokes of the terrible ; in short, by such innumerable beauties of every kind, that he has found out the secret of making an agreeable monster. Let every reader ask himself what he would think, if he should read for the first time the Iliad and Tasso's poem, without knowing the names of their authors, and the times when their works were compos'd, and determine of them merely by the degree of pleasure they each of them excited. Would he not give the entire preference to Tasso ? Would he not find in the Italian more conduct and oeconomy, more interesting circumstances, more variety and exactness, more graces and embellishments, and more of that softness which eases, relieves, and adds a lustre to the sublime ? I question whether they will even bear a comparison a few ages hence.”

Four swans sustain a car of silver bright, 210
 With heads advanc'd, and pinions stretch'd for flight :
 Here, like some furious prophet, Pindar rode,
 And seem'd to labour with th' inspiring God.
 Across the harp a careless hand he flings,
 And boldly sinks into the sounding strings. 215
 The figur'd games of Greece the column grace,
 Neptune and Jove survey the rapid race.

 The fiery steeds seem starting from the stone ;
 The champions in distorted postures threat ; 220

NOTES.

VER. 210. Four swans sustain, &c.] Pindar being seated in a chariot, alludes to the chariot-races he celebrated in the Grecian games. The swans are emblems of Poetry, their soaring posture intimates the sublimity and activity of his genius. Neptune presided over the Isthmian, and Jupiter over the Olympian games. W.

The character of Pindar, as commonly given, seems not to be well understood. We are perpetually told of the boldness and the violence of his transitions ; whereas, on a closer inspection, they appear easy and unforced, are closely connected with, and arise appositely from his subject. A dissertation on this topic, which I have read, may perhaps one day be published. Even his stile has been represented as too swelling and bombast ; but, carefully examined, it will appear not to abound with those violent and harsh metaphors, and that profusion of florid epithets, which some of his imitators, who appear not to have read and studied the original, affect to use. One of Pindar's arts, which Lord Bacon has observed, and in which his copiers fail, is the introduction of many moral reflections. Animos hominum, inopinato (says Bacon) sententiolâ aliquâ mirabili, veluti virgulâ divinâ percutit. Gray has most closely studied, and most happily imitated, the manner of Pindar of all our writers.

NOTES.

VER. 230. The Doves] Surely he might have selected, for the basso relievos about the statue of Horace, ornaments more manly and characteristical of his genius. Among the various views in which the very numerous commentators have considered his odes, they seem to have neglected to remark the dramatic turn he has given to many of them. Witness, the prophecy of Nercus, the animated speech of Juno, the speeches of Regulus, and of Europa and her father, and of one of the daughters of Danaus ; as also of the boy seized by the witches, and of Canidia herself, in the fifth epode.

NOTES.

VER. 232. Here in a shrine] It may not be displeasing to observe the artful manner with which Addison has introduced each of his worthies at the tables of Fame; and how nicely he has adapted the behaviour of each person to his character. Addison had great skill in the use of delicate and oblique allusions: "It was expected that Plato would have taken a place next his master Socrates; but on a sudden there was heard a great clamour of disputants at the door, who appeared with Aristotle at the head of them. That philosopher, with some rudeness, but great strength of reason, convinced the whole table that a fifth place at the table was his due, and took it accordingly." Thus, in another passage: "Julius Cæsar was now coming forward; and though most of the historians offered their service to introduce him, he left them at the door, and would have no conductor but himself." (Tatler, N^o 81.) In the same spirit he tells us, "That Q. Curtius intended to conduct Alexander the Great to an apartment appointed for the reception of fabulous heroes; that Virgil hung back at the entrance of the door, and would have excused himself, had not his modesty been overcome by the invitation of all who sat at the table; that Lucan entered at the head of many historians with Pompey; and that seeing Homer and Virgil at the table, was going to sit down himself, had not the latter whispered him, he had forfeited his claim to it by coming in as one of the historians."

VER. 238. With equal rays immortal] This beautiful attitude is copied from a statue in that valuable collection which Lady Pomfret had the goodness and generosity lately to present to the University of Oxford.—“Cicero (says Addison) next appeared and took his place. He had enquired at the door for one Luccius to introduce him; but not finding him there, he contented himself with the attendance of many other writers, who all, except Sallust, appeared highly pleased with the office.”

I cannot forbear taking occasion to mention an ingenious imitation of this paper of Addison, called The Table of Modern Fame, at which the guests are introduced and ranged with that taste and judgement which is peculiar to the author. (Dr. Akenfide, Dodley's Museum, N^o 13.) It may not be unentertaining to enumerate the persons in the order he has placed them, by which his sense of their merits will appear: Columbus, Peter the Great, Leo X., Martin Luther, Newton, Descartes, Lewis XIV., William I. Prince of Orange, Edward the Black Prince, Francis I., Charles V., Locke, Galileo, John Faust, Harvey, Machiavel, Tasso, Ariosto, Pope, Boileau, Bacon, Milton, Cervantes, and Moliere.

NOTES.

VER. 264. The roofs ascend,] Extension is certainly a cause of the sublime. The reader feels a pleasure in having his eye carried through a vast length of building, almost to an immensity. Of this kind is a very noble image in one of Milton's Latin poems little attended to; where, with a great reach of fancy, he says, that the original Archetype of Man may be a huge giant, stalking in some remote unknown region of the earth, and lifting his head so high as to be dreaded by the gods:

" Sive in remotâ forte terraram plagâ
 Incedit ingens Hominis Archetypus gigas,
 Et diis tremendus erigit celsum caput."

Millions of suppliant crouds the shrine attend,

NOTES.

VER. 378. Next these a youthful train] Strokes of pleasantry and humour, and satirical reflections on the foibles of common life, are surely too familiar, and unsuited to so grave and majestic a poem as this hitherto has appeared to be. Such incongruities offend propriety; though I know ingenious persons have endeavoured to excuse them, by saying that they add a variety of imagery to the piece. This practice is even defended by a passage in Horace:

“ Et fermone opus est modo tristi, sæpe jocofo,
 Defendente vicem modo rhetoris atque poetæ,
 Interdum urbani, parentis viribus, atque
 Extenuantis eas consulto.”

But this judicious remark is, I apprehend, confined to ethic and preceptive kinds of writing, which stand in need of being enlivened with lighter images and sportive thoughts, and where strictures on common life may more gracefully be inserted. But, in the higher kinds of poesy, they appear as unnatural and out of place, as one of the burlesque scenes of Heemskirk would do in a solemn landscape of Poussin. When I see such a line as, in the Temple of Fame, I lament as much to find it placed there,

“ And at each blast a Lady's honour dies,”—

Hither, they cry'd, direct your eyes, and see 380
 The men of pleasure, dress, and gallantry ;
 Ours is the place at banquets, balls, and plays,
 Sprightly our nights, polite are all our days ;
 Courts we frequent, where 'tis our pleasing care
 To pay due visits, and address the fair : 385
 In fact, 'tis true, no nymph we could persuade,
 But still in fancy vanquish'd ev'ry maid ;
 Of unknown Duchesses leud tales we tell,
 Yet, would the world believe us, all were well.
 The joy let others have, and we the name, 390
 And what we want in pleasure, grant in fame.

On the revival of literature, the first writers seem'd not to have observed any selection in their thoughts and images. Dante, Petrarch, Boccace, Ariosto, make very sudden transitions from the sublime to the ridiculous. Chaucer, in his Temple of Mars, amongst many pathetic pictures, has brought in a strange line :

Not less in number were the spacious doors,
 Than leaves on trees, or sands upon the shores; 425
 Which still unfolded stand, by night, by day,
 Pervious to winds, and open ev'ry way.
 As flames by nature to the skies ascend,
 As weighty bodies to the centre tend,
 As to the sea returning rivers roll, 430
 And the touch'd needle trembles to the pole;
 Hither, as to their proper place, arise
 All various sounds from earth, and seas, and skies,
 Or spoke aloud, or whisper'd in the ear;
 Nor ever silence, rest, or peace is here. 435
 As on the smooth expanse of crystal lakes
 The sinking stone at first a circle makes;
 The trembling surface by the motion stirr'd,
 Spreads in a second circle, then a third; 439
 Wide, and more wide, the floating rings advance,
 Fill all the wat'ry plain, and to the margin dance:
 Thus ev'ry voice and sound, when first they break,
 On neighb'ring air a soft impression make;
 Another ambient circle then they move;
 That, in its turn, impels the next above; 445
 Through undulating air the sounds are sent,
 And spread o'er all the fluid element.

NOTES.

VER. 497. While thus I stood, &c.] The hint is taken from a passage in another part of the third book, but here more naturally made the conclusion, with the addition of a moral to the whole. In Chaucer he only answers, " he came to see the place ;" and the book ends abruptly, with his being surprized at the sight of a Man of great Authority, and awakening in a fright." P.

Then teach me, heav'n! to scorn the guilty bays,
 Drive from my breast that wretched lust of praise;

“THIS poem contains great strokes of Gothic imagination, yet bordering often on the most ideal and capricious extravagance. The poet, in a vision, sees a temple of glass:

“ In which were more images
 Of gold stondinge in sundrie stages,
 Sette in more riche tabernacles,
 And with perre more pinnacles,
 And more curious pourtraituris
 And quaint manir of figuris
 Of golde work than I sawe evir.”

“ On the walls of this temple were engraved stories from Virgil's Eneid and Ovid's epistles.

“ Leaving this temple, he sees an eagle with golden wings soaring near the sun.

“ — Fastę by the sonne on hie
 As kennyng myght I with mine eie,
 Methought I sawe an egle fore ;
 But that it semid mochil more,
 Then I had any egle seen.
 It was of gold, and shone so bright,
 That nevir man sawe suche a sight,” &c.

“ The eagle descends, seizes the poet in his talons, and, mounting again, conveys him to the house of Fame; which is situated, like that of Ovid, between earth and sea. In their passage thither, they fly above the stars; which our author leaves with clouds, tempests, hail, and snow, far beneath him. This aerial journey is partly copied from Ovid's Phaeton in the chariot of the sun. But the poet apologises for this extravagant fiction, and explains his meaning, by alledging the authority of Boethius; who says, that contemplation may soar on the wings of philosophy above every element. He likewise recollects, in the midst of his course, the description of the heavens, given by Marcianus Capella, in his book book De Nuptiis Philologiæ et Mercurii, and Alanus in his Anticlaudian. At his arrival in the confines of the house of Fame, he is alarmed with confused murmurs issuing from thence, like distant thunders or billows. This circumstance is also borrowed from Ovid's Temple. He is left by the eagle near the house, which is built of materials bright as polished glass, and stands on a rock of ice of excessive height, and almost inaccessible. All the Southern side of this rock was covered with engravings of the names of famous men, which were perpetually melting away by the heat of the sun. The Northern side of the rock was alike covered with names; but being here shaded from the warmth of the sun, the characters remained unmelted and uneffaced. The structure of the house is thus imagined:

—“Methoughtin by Saint Gile,
That all was of stone of berille,
Both of the castle and the toure,
And eke the hall and everie boure:
Without pecis or joynynges,
And many subtill compassyngs,
As barbicans and pinnacles,
Imageries and tabernacles,
I sawe, and full eke of windowis
As flakis fallin in great snowis.”

“In these lines, and in some others which occur hereafter, the poet perhaps alludes to the many new decorations in architecture, which began to prevail about his time, and gave rise to the florid Gothic style. There are instances of this in his other poems. In his Dreame, printed 1597:

“And of a sute were al the touris,
Subtily carven aftir flouris,—
With many a smal turret hie.”

“And in the description of the Palace of Pleasaunt Regarde, in the Assemblee of Ladies:

“Fairir is none, though it were for a king
Devisid wel, and that in every thing;
The towris hie, ful plesante shal ye finde,
With fannis fresh, turning with everie winde.
The chambris, and the palirs of a sorte,
With bay windows, goodlie as may be thought:
As for daunsing or other wise disporte,
The galleries be al right wel ywrought.”

“ In Chaucer’s life, by Anthony Hall, it is not mentioned that he was appointed clerk of the king’s works in the palace of Westminster, in the royal manors of Shene, Kenington, Byfleet, and Clapton, and in the mews at Charing.

Again, in 1380, of the works of St. George’s chapel at Windsor, then ruinous. But to return :

——— “ All manir of minstrelis,
And jestours that tellyn tales
Both of weping and eke of game.”

“ That is, those who sung or recited adventures, either tragic or comic, which excited either compassion or laughter. They were accompanied with the most renowned harpers ; among which were Orpheus, Arion, Chiron, and the Briton Glaskerion. Behind these were placed, “ by many a thousand time twelve,” players on various instruments of music. Among the trumpeters are named Joab, Virgil’s Misenus, and Theodamus. About these pinnacles were also marshalled the most famous magicians, jugglers, witches, propheteesses, forcereesses, and professors of natural magic, which ever existed in ancient or modern times ; such as Medea, Circe, Calliope, Hermes, Limotheus, and Simon Magus. At entering the hall he sees an infinite multitude of heralds ; on the surcoats of whom were richly embroidered the armorial ensigns of the most redoubted champions that ever tourneyed in Africa, Europe, or Asia. The floor and roof of the hall were covered with thick plates of gold, studded with the costliest gems. At the upper end, on a lofty shrine, made with carbuncle, sat Fame ; her figure is like those in Virgil and Ovid. Above her, as if sustained on her shoulders, sat Hercules and Alexander. From the throne to the gates of the hall ran a range of pillars, with respective inscriptions. On the first pillar, made of lead and iron, stood Josephus, the Jewish historian, (“ that of the Jewis gestis told”), with seven other writers on the same subject. On the second pillar, made of iron, and painted all over with the blood of tygers, stood Statius. On another, higher than the rest, stood Homer, Dares, Phrygius, Livy, Lollius, Guido of Columna, and Geoffry of Monmouth, writers of the Trojan story. On a pillar of “ tinnid iron clere,” stood Virgil ; and next to him, on a pillar of copper, appeared Ovid. The figure of Lucan was placed on a pillar of iron, “ wrought full sternly,” accompanied with many Roman historians. On a pillar of sulphur stood Claudian, so symbolised, because he wrote of Pluto and Proserpine ;

“ That

“ That bare up all the fame of hell ;
Of Pluto and of Proserpine
That queen is of the darke pine.”

“The hall was filled with the writers of ancient tales and romances, whose subjects and names were too numerous to be recounted. In the mean time crowds from every nation, and of every condition, filled the hall, and each presented his claim to the queen. A messenger is dispatched to summon Eolus from his cave in Thrace, who is ordered to bring his two clarions, called Slander and Praise, and his trumpeter Triton. The praises of each petitioner are then resounded, according to the partial or capricious appointment of Fame; and equal merits obtain very different success. There is much satire and humour in these requests and rewards, and in the disgraces and honours which are indiscriminately distributed by the queen, without discernment and by chance. The poet then enters the house or labyrinth of Rumour. It was built of fallow twigs, like a cage, and therefore admitted every sound. Its doors were also more numerous than leaves on the trees, and always stood open. These are romantic exaggerations of Ovid's inventions on the same subject. It was, moreover, sixty miles in length, and perpetually turning round. From this house (says the poet) issued tidings of every kind, like fountains and rivers from the sea. Its inhabitants, who were eternally employed in hearing or telling news, together with the rise of reports, and the formation of lies, are then humourously described. The company is chiefly composed of sailors, pilgrims, and pardoners. At length our author is awakened at seeing a venerable personage of great authority; and thus the vision abruptly concludes.

“ Pope has imitated this piece with his usual elegance of diction and harmony of versification; but, in the mean time, he has not only misrepresented the story, but marred the character of the poem. He has endeavoured to correct its extravagancies by new refinements and additions of another cast; but he did not consider that extravagancies are essential to a poem of such a structure, and even constitute its beauties. An attempt to unite order and exactness of imagery with a subject formed on principles so professedly romantic and anomalous, is like giving Corinthian pillars to a Gothic palace. When I read Pope's elegant imitation of this piece, I think I am walking among the modern monuments unsuitably placed in Westminster Abbey.”

JANUARY AND MAY:

OR THE

MERCHANT'S TALE.

FROM CHAUCER.

THE story of January and May now before us is of the comic kind; and the character of a fond old dotard betrayed into disgrace by an unsuitable match is supported in a lively manner. Pope has endeavoured suitably to familiarize the stateliness of our heroic measure in this ludicrous narrative; but, after all his pains, this measure is not adapted to such subjects so well as the lines of four feet, or the French numbers of Fontaine. Fontaine is, in truth, the capital and unrivalled writer of comic tales. He generally took his subjects from Boccace, Poggius, and Ariosto; but adorned them with so many natural strokes, with such quaintness in his reflections, and such a dryness and archness of humour, as cannot fail to excite laughter.

Our Prior has happily caught his manner in many of his lighter tales, particularly in Hans Carvel; the invention of which, if its genealogy be worth tracing, is first due to Poggius. It is found in the hundred and thirty-third of his Facetiæ, where it is entitled, Vizio Francisci Philelphi; from hence Rabelais inserted it under another title, in his third book and twenty-eighth chapter. It was afterwards related in a book called the Hundred Novels. Ariosto finishes the fifth of his incomparable satires with it. Malespini also made use of it. Fontaine, who imagined Rabelais to be the inventor of it, was the sixth author who delivered it, as our Prior was the last, and perhaps not the least spirited. Mr. Tyrwhit gives the following account of this tale: "The scene of the Merchant's Tale is laid in Italy; but none of the names, except Damian and Justin, seem to be Italian, but rather made at pleasure; so that I doubt whether the story be really of Italian growth. The adventure of the pear-tree I find in a small collection of Latin fables, written by one Adolphus, in elegiac verses of his fashion, in the year 1315. This fable has never been printed but once, and in a book not commonly to be met with.

"Whatever was the real original of this tale, the machinery of the Fairies, which Chaucer has used so happily, was probably added by himself; and indeed I cannot help thinking that his Pluto and Proserpine were the true progenitors of Oberon and Titania, or rather rather that they themselves have, once at least, designed to revisit our poetical system under the latter names. "In the History of English Poetry, vol. i. p. 421. this is said to be an old Lombard story." But many passages in it are evidently taken from the Polycraticon of John of Salisbury. De molestiis et oncribus conjugiorum secundum Hieronymum et alios philosophos. Et de pernicie libidinis. Et de mulieris Ephesinae et similibus fide. And by the way, about forty verses belonging to this argument are translated from the same chapter of the Polycraticon, in the Wife of Bath's prologue. In the mean time it is not improbable that this tale might have originally been Oriental. A Persian tale is just published which it extremely resembles; and it has much of the allegory of an Eastern apologue."

The author adds, that the Miller's Tale, in Chaucer, excels all his other tales in true and exquisite humour.

JANUARY AND MAY.

THERE liv'd in Lombardy, as authors write,
 In days of old, a wise and worthy knight;
 Of gentle manners, as of gen'rous race,
 Blest with much sense, more riches, and some grace.
 Yet led astray by Venus' soft delights, 5
 He scarce could rule some idle appetites:
 For long ago, let Priests say what they could,
 Weak sinful laymen were but flesh and blood.

“ Ther n'is no thing in gree superlatif
“ (As faith Senek) above an humble wif.

Now, Sirs, you know to what I stand inclin'd,
Let ev'ry friend with freedom speak his mind.

He said; the rest in diff'rent parts divide;
The knotty point was urg'd on either side: 140
Marriage, the theme on which they all declaim'd,
Some prais'd with wit, and some with reason blam'd.
Till, what with proofs, objections, and replies,
Each wond'rous positive, and wond'rous wise,
There fell between his brothers a debate, 145
Placebo this was call'd, and Justin that.

First to the Knight Placebo thus begun,
(Mild were his looks, and pleasing was his tone)
Such prudence, Sir, in all your words appears,
As plainly proves, experience dwells with years!
Yet you pursue sage Solomon's advice, 151
To work by counsel when affairs are nice;

But,

IMITATIONS.

- “ Suffer thy wives tongue, as Caton bit,
“ She shal command, and thou shalt suffren it,
“ And yet she wol obey of curtesie.
“ A wif is keper of thin husbondrie:
“ Wel may the sike man bewaile and wepe,
“ I warne thee, if wisely thou wilt werche,
“ Love wel thy wif, as Christ loveth his Cherche:
“ If thou lovest thyself, love thou thy wif.
“ No man hateth his flesh, but in his lif
“ He fostreth it, and therefore bid I thee “ Cherish thy wif, or thou shalt never the.
“ Husbond and wif, what so men jasse or play,
“ Of worldly folk holden the siker way;
“ They ben so knit, ther may non harm betide,
“ And namely upon the wives side,

But, with the wife man's leave, I must protest,
 So may my soul arrive at ease and rest,
 As still I hold your own advice the best. 155

Sir, I have liv'd a Courtier all my days,
 And study'd men, their manners, and their ways;
 And have observ'd this useful maxim still,
 To let my betters always have their will.
 Nay, if my lord affirm'd that black was white, 160
 My word was this, "Your honour's in the right."
 Th' assuming Wit, who deems himself so wise,
 As his mistaken patron to advise,
 Let him not dare to vent his dang'rous thought,
 A noble fool was never in a fault. 165

This, Sir, affects not you, whose ev'ry word
 Is weigh'd with judgment, and befits a Lord:
 Your will is mine; and is (I will maintain)
 Pleasing to God, and should be so to Man;
 At least, your courage all the world must praise, 170
 Who dare to wed in your declining days.
 Indulge the vigour of your mounting blood,
 And let grey fools be indolently good,
 Who, past all pleasure, damn the joys of sense,
 With rev'rend dullness and grave impotence. 175

Justin, who silent fate, and heard the man,
 Thus, with a Philosophic frown, began:

A heathen author, of the first degree,
 (Who, tho' not Faith, had Sense as well as we)
 Bids us be certain our concerns to trust 180
 To those of gen'rous principles, and just.

The venture's greater, I'll presume to say,
 To give your person, than your goods away :
 And therefore, Sir, as you regard your rest,
 First learn your Lady's qualities at least : 185
 Whether she's chaste or rampant, proud or civil ;
 Meek as a saint, or haughty as the devil ;
 Whether an easy, fond, familiar fool,
 Or such a wit as no man e'er can rule.
 'Tis true, perfection none must hope to find 190
 In all this world, much less in woman-kind ;
 But if her virtues prove the larger share,
 Bless the kind fates, and think your fortune rare.
 Ah, gentle Sir, take warning of a friend,
 Who knows too well the state you thus commend ;
 And spite of all his praises must declare, 196
 All he can find is bondage, cost, and care.
 Heav'n knows, I shed full many a private tear,
 And sigh in silence, lest the world should hear :
 While all my friends applaud my blissful life, 200
 And swear no mortal's happier in a wife ;
 Demure and chaste as any vestal Nun,
 The meekest creature that beholds the sun !
 But, by th' immortal powers I feel the pain,
 And he that smarts has reason to complain. 205
 Do what you list, for me ; you must be sage,
 And cautious sure ; for wisdom is in Age ;
 But at these years to venture on the fair !
 By him, who made the ocean, earth, and air,
 To please a wife, when her occasions call, 210
 Would busy the most vig'rous of us all.

And trust me, Sir, the chafteft you can chufe
 Will ask obfervance, and exact her dues.
 If what I fpeak my noble Lord offend,
 My tedious fermon here is at an end. 215

'Tis well, 'tis wondrous well, the Knight replies,
 Moft worthy kinfman, faith you're mighty wife!
 We, Sirs, are fools; and muft resign the caufe
 To heath'nifh authors, proverbs, and old faws.
 He fpoke with fcorn, and turn'd another way:—
 What does my friend, my dear Placebo fay! 221

I fay, quoth he, by heav'n the man's to blame,
 To flander wives, and wedlock's holy name.

At this the council rofe, without delay;
 Each, in his own opinion, went his way; 225
 With full confent, that, all difputes appeas'd,
 The Knight fhould marry, when and where he pleas'd.

Who now but January exults with joy?
 The charms of Wedlock all his foul employ:
 Each nymph by turns his wav'ring mind poffefft, 230
 And reign'd the fhort-liv'd tyrant of his breaft;
 Whilft fancy pictur'd every lively part,
 And each bright image wander'd o'er his heart.
 Thus, in fome public Forum fix'd on high,
 A Mirrour fhows the figures moving by; 235
 Still one by one, in fwift fucceffion, pafs
 The gliding fhadows o'er the polifh'd glafs.
 This Lady's charms the nicelt could not blame,
 But vile fufpicions had afpers'd her fame;

That

That was with sense, but not with virtue, blest : 240
 And one had grace, that wanted all the rest.

Thus doubting long what nymph he should obey,
 He fix'd at last upon the youthful May.

Her faults he knew not, Love is always blind,
 But ev'ry charm revolv'd within his mind : 245

Her tender age, her form divinely fair,

Her easy motion, her attractive air,

Her sweet behaviour, her enchanting face,

Her moving softness, and majestic grace.

Much in his prudence did our Knight rejoice, 250
 And thought no mortal could dispute his choice :

Once more in haste he summon'd ev'ry friend,

And told them all, their pains were at an end.

Heav'n, that (said he) inspir'd me first to wed,

Provides a consort worthy of my bed : 255

Let none oppose th' election, since on this

Depends my quiet, and my future bliss.

A dame there is, the darling of my eyes,

Young, beauteous, artless, innocent, and wise ;

Chaste, though not rich ; and tho' not nobly born,

Of honest parents, and may serve my turn. 261

Her will I wed, if gracious heav'n so please ;

To pass my age in sanctity and ease ;

And

NOTES.

VER. 261. May serve my turn.] One of Dryden's familiar, colloquial terms, happily used ; as also verse 286. Dryden, among other excellencies of a varied style, was happy in the use of such terms.

And thank the pow'rs, I may possess alone
 The lovely prize, and share my bliss with none! 265
 If you, my friends, this virgin can procure,
 My joys are full, my happiness is sure.

One only doubt remains: Full oft, I've heard,
 By casuists grave, and deep divines averr'd;
 That 'tis too much for human race to know 270
 The bliss of heav'n above, and earth below.
 Now should the nuptial pleasures prove so great,
 To match the blessings of the future state,
 Those endless joys were ill exchang'd for these;
 Then clear this doubt, and set my mind at ease. 275

This Justin heard, nor could his spleen controul,
 Touch'd to the quick, and tickled at the soul.
 Sir Knight, he cry'd, if this be all you dread,
 Heav'n put it past your doubt, whene'er you wed;
 And to my fervent pray'rs so far consent, 280
 That ere the rites are o'er, you may repent!
 Good heav'n, no doubt, the nuptial state approves,
 Since it chastises still what best it loves.

Then be not, Sir, abandon'd to despair;
 Seek, and perhaps you'll find among the fair, 285
 One, that may do your business to a hair;
 Not ev'n in wish, your happiness delay,
 But prove the scourge to lash you on your way:
 Then to the skies your mounting soul shall go,
 Swift as an arrow soaring from the bow! 290

Provided

Provided still, you moderate your joy,
 Nor in your pleasures all your might employ,
 Let reason's rule your strong desires abate,
 Nor please too lavishly your gentle mate.
 Old wives there are, of judgment most acute, 295
 Who solve these questions beyond all dispute;
 Consult with those, and be of better cheer;
 Marry, do penance, and dismiss your fear.

So said, they rose, nor more the work delay'd;
 The match was offer'd, the proposals made. 300
 The parents, you may think, would soon comply;
 The Old have int'rest ever in their eye.
 Nor was it hard to move the Lady's mind;
 When fortune favours, still the Fair are kind.

I pass each previous settlement and deed, 305
 Too long for me to write, or you to read;
 Nor will with quaint impertinence display
 The pomp, the pageantry, the proud array.
 The time approach'd, to Church the parties went,
 At once with carnal and devout intent: 310
 Forth came the Priest, and bade th' obedient wife
 Like Sarah or Rebecca lead her life:
 Then pray'd the pow'rs the fruitful bed to bless,
 And made all sure enough with holiness.

And now the palace-gates are open'd wide, 315
 The guests appear in order, side by side,
 And plac'd in state, the bridegroom and the bride,

The

The breathing flute's soft notes are heard around,
 And the shrill trumpets mix their silver sound;
 The vaulted roofs with echoing musick ring, 320
 These touch the vocal stops, and those the trembling string.

Not thus Amphion tun'd the warbling lyre,
 Nor Joab the sounding clarion could inspire,
 Nor fierce Theodomas, whose sprightly strain
 Could swell the soul to rage, and fire the martial train.

Bacchus himself, the nuptial feast to grace, 326

(So Poets sing) was present on the place:

And lovely Venus, Goddess of delight,

Shook high her flaming torch in open fight,

And danc'd around, and smil'd on ev'ry knight:

Pleas'd her best servant would his courage try, 331

No less in wedlock, than in liberty.

Full many an age old Hymen had not spy'd

So kind a bridegroom, or so bright a bride.

Ye bards! renown'd among the tuneful throng 335

For gentle lays, and joyous nuptial song;

Think not your softest numbers can display

The matchless glories of this blissful day;

The joys are such, as far transcend your rage,

When tender youth has wedded stooping age. 340

The beauteous dame fate smiling at the board,

And darted am'rous glances at her Lord.

Not Hester's self, whose charms the Hebrews sing,

E'er look'd so lovely on her Persian King:

Bright

Bright as the rising sun, in summer's day, 345
 And fresh and blooming as the month of May!
 The joyful Knight survey'd her by his side,
 Nor envy'd Paris with the Spartan bride :
 Still as his mind revolv'd with vast delight
 Th' entrancing raptures of th' approaching night,
 Restless he fate, invoking ev'ry pow'r 351
 To speed his bliss, and haste the happy hour.
 Mean time the vig'rous dancers beat the ground,
 And songs were fung, and flowing bowls went round.
 With od'rous spices they perfum'd the place, 355
 And mirth and pleasure shone in ev'ry face.

Damian alone, of all the menial train,
 Sad in the midst of triumphs, sigh'd for pain ;
 Damian alone, the Knight's obsequious Squire,
 Consum'd at heart, and fed a secret fire. 360
 His lovely mistress all his soul possess'd,
 He look'd, he languish'd, and could take no rest :
 His task perform'd, he sadly went his way,
 Fell on his bed, and loath'd the light of day.
 There let him lie ; till his relenting dame 365
 Weep in her turn, and waste in equal flame.

The weary sun, as learned Poets write,
 Forsook th' Horizon, and roll'd down the light ;
 While glitt'ring stars his absent beams supply,
 And night's dark mantle overspread the sky. 370
 Then rose the guests ; and as the time requir'd,
 Each paid his thanks, and decently retir'd.

The foe once gone, our Knight prepar'd t'undress,
 So keen he was, and eager to possess :
 But first thought fit th' assistance to receive, 375
 Which grave Physicians scruple not to give ;
 Satyrion near, with hot Eringos stood,
 Cantharides, to fire the lazy blood,
 Whose use old Bards describe in luscious rhymes,
 And Critics learn'd explain to modern times, 380
 By this the sheets were spread, the bride undress'd,
 The room was sprinkled, and the bed was bless'd.
 What next ensu'd beseems not me to say ;
 'Tis sung, he labour'd till the dawning day,
 Then briskly sprung from bed, with heart so light,
 As all were nothing he had done by night ; 386
 And sipp'd his cordial as he sat upright.
 He kiss'd his balmy spouse with wanton play,
 And feebly sung a lusty roundelay :
 Then on the couch his weary limbs he cast ; 390
 For ev'ry labour must have rest at last.

But anxious cares the pensive Squire oppress'd,
 Sleep fled his eyes, and peace forsook his breast ;
 The raging flames that in his bosom dwell,
 He wanted art to hide, and means to tell. 395
 Yet hoping time th' occasion might betray,
 Compos'd a sonnet to the lovely May ;
 Which writ and folded with the nicest art,
 He wrapp'd in silk, and laid upon his heart. 399

When now the fourth revolving day was run,
 ('Twas June, and Cancer had receiv'd the Sun)

Forth from her chamber came the beauteous bride,
 The good old Knight mov'd slowly by her side.
 High mass was sung; they feasted in the hall;
 The servants round stood ready at their call. 405
 The Squire alone was absent from the board,
 And much his sickness griev'd his worthy lord,
 Who pray'd his spouse, attended with her train,
 To visit Damian, and divert his pain.
 Th' obliging dames obey'd with one consent; 410
 They left the hall, and to his lodging went.
 The female tribe surround him as he lay,
 And close beside him sat the gentle May:
 Where, as she try'd his pulse, he softly drew
 A heaving sigh, and cast a mournful view! 415
 Then gave his bill, and brib'd the pow'rs divine,
 With secret vows, to favour his design.

Who studies now but discontented May?
 On her soft couch uneasily she lay:
 The lumpish husband snor'd away the night, 420
 Till coughs awak'd him near the morning light.
 What then he did, I'll not presume to tell,
 Nor if she thought herself in heav'n or hell:
 Honest and dull in nuptial bed they lay,
 Till the bell toll'd, and all arose to pray. 425

Were it by forceful destiny decreed,
 Or did from chance, or nature's pow'r proceed;
 Or that some star, with aspect kind to love,
 Shed its selected influence from above;

Whatever

Whatever was the cause, the tender dame 430

Felt the first motions of an infant flame ;

Receiv'd th' impressions of the love-sick Squire,

And wasted in the soft infectious fire.

Ye fair, draw near, let May's example move

Your gentle minds to pity those who love ! 435

Had some fierce tyrant in her stead been found,

The poor adorer sure had hang'd, or drown'd :

But she, your sex's mirror, free from pride,

Was much too meek to prove a homicide.

But to my tale : Some sages have defin'd 440

Pleasure the sov'reign bliss of human-kind :

Our Knight (who study'd much, we may suppose)

Deriv'd his high philosophy from those ;

For, like a Prince, he bore the vast expence

Of lavish pomp, and proud magnificence : 445

His house was stately, his retinue gay,

Large was his train, and gorgeous his array.

His spacious garden made to yield to none,

Was compass'd round with walls of solid stone ;

Priapus could not half describe the grace 450

(Tho' God of Gardens) of this charming place :

A place to tire the rambling wits of France

In long descriptions, and exceed Romance :

Enough to shame the gentlest bard that sings

Of painted meadows, and of purling springs. 455

Full in the centre of the flow'ry ground,

A crystal fountain spread its streams around,

The fruitful banks with verdant laurels crown'd

About this spring (if ancient fame say true)
 The dapper Elves their moon-light sports pursue:
 Their pigmy king, and little fairy queen, 461
 In circling dances gambol'd on the green,
 While tuneful sprites a merry concert made,
 And airy music warbled through the shade.

Hither the noble Knight would oft repair, 465
 (His scene of pleasure, and peculiar care)
 For this he held it dear, and always bore
 The silver key that lock'd the garden door.
 To this sweet place in summer's sultry heat,
 He us'd from noise and business to retreat; 470
 And here in dalliance spend the live-long day,
Solus cum sola, with his sprightly May.

For whate'er work was undischarg'd a-bed,
 The duteous Knight in this fair garden sped.
 But ah! what mortal lives of bliss secure, 475
 How short a space our worldly joys endure?
 O Fortune, fair, like all thy treach'rous kind,
 But faithless still, and wav'ring as the wind!
 O painted monster, form'd mankind to cheat,
 With pleasing poison, and with soft deceit! 480
 This rich, this am'rous, venerable knight,
 Amidst his ease, his solace, and delight,
 Struck blind by thee, resigns his days to grief,
 And calls on death, the wretch's last relief.

The

NOTES.

VER. 465. Hither the noble Knight] He has no where copied the free and easy versification and the narrative style of Dryden's Fables so happily as in this pleasant tale.

The rage of jealousy then seiz'd his mind, 485
 For much he fear'd the faith of womankind:
 His wife not suffer'd from his side to stray,
 Was captive kept, he watch'd her night and day,
 Abridg'd her pleasures, and confin'd her sway.
 Full oft in tears did hapless May complain, 490
 And sigh'd full oft; but sigh'd and wept in vain;
 She look'd on Damian with a lover's eye;
 For oh, 'twas fixt; she must possess or die!
 Nor less impatience vex'd her am'rous Squire,
 Wild with delay, and burning with desire. 495
 Watch'd as she was, yet could he not refrain
 By secret writing to disclose his pain;
 The dame by signs reveal'd her kind intent,
 Till both were conscious what each other meant.

Ah, gentle knight, what would thy eyes avail,
 Tho' they could see as far as ships can sail? 501
 'Tis better, sure, when blind, deceiv'd to be,
 Than be deluded when a man can see!

Argus himself, so cautious and so wise,
 Was over-watch'd, for all his hundred eyes: 505
 So many an honest husband may, 'tis known,
 Who, wisely, never thinks the case his own.

The dame at last, by diligence and care,
 Procur'd the key her knight was wont to bear;
 She took the wards in wax before the fire, 510
 And gave th' impression to the trusty Squire.
 By means of this, some wonder shall appear,
 Which, in due place and season, you may hear.

Well sung sweet Ovid, in the days of yore,
 What flight is that, which love will not explore?
 And Pyramus and Thisbe plainly show 516
 The feats true lovers, when they list, can do:
 Tho' watch'd and captive, yet in spite of all,
 They found the art of kissing through a wall.

But now no longer from our tale to stray; 520
 It hap'd that once upon a summer's day,
 Our rev'rend Knight was urg'd to am'rous play:
 He rais'd his spouse ere Matin-bell was rung,
 And thus his morning canticle he sung.

Awake, my love, disclose thy radiant eyes; 525
 Arise, my wife, my beauteous lady, rise!
 Hear how the doves with pensive notes complain,
 And in soft murmurs tell the trees their pain:
 The winter's past; the clouds and tempests fly;
 The sun adorns the fields, and brightens all the sky.
 Fair without spot, whose ev'ry charming part 531
 My bosom wounds, and captivates my heart;
 Come, and in mutual pleasures let's engage,
 Joy of my life, and comfort of my age.

This heard, to Damian straight a sign she made,
 To haste before; the gentle Squire obey'd: 536
 Secret and undescry'd he took his way,
 And ambush'd close behind an arbour lay.

It was not long ere January came,
 And hand in hand with him his lovely dame; 540
 Blind as he was, not doubting all was sure,
 He turn'd the key, and made the gate secure.

Here

Here let us walk, he said, observ'd by none,
 Conscious of pleasures to the world unknown :
 So may my soul have joy, as thou my wife 545
 Art far the dearest solace of my life ;
 And rather would I chuse, by Heav'n above,
 To die this instant, than to lose thy love.
 Reflect what truth was in my passion shewn,
 When, unendow'd, I took thee for my own, 550
 And sought no treasure but thy heart alone.
 Old as I am, and now depriv'd of sight,
 Whilst thou art faithful to thy own true Knight,
 Nor age, nor blindness, rob me of delight.
 Each other loss with patience I can bear, 555
 The loss of thee is what I only fear.

Consider then, my lady and my wife,
 The solid comforts of a virtuous life.
 As first, the love of Christ himself you gain ;
 Next, your own honour undefil'd maintain ; 560
 And lastly, that which sure your mind must move,
 My whole estate shall gratify your love :
 Make your own terms, and ere to-morrow's sun
 Displays his light, by Heav'n it shall be done.
 I seal the contract with a holy kiss, 565
 And will perform, by this—my dear, and this—
 Have comfort, Spouse, nor think thy Lord unkind ;
 'Tis love, not jealousy, that fires my mind.
 For when thy charms my sober thoughts engage,
 And join'd to them my own unequal age, 570

From thy dear side I have no pow'r to part,
 Such secret transports warm my melting heart.
 For who that once possess'd those heav'nly charms,
 Could live one moment absent from thy arms? 574

He ceas'd, and May with modest grace reply'd ;
 (Weak was her voice, as while she spoke she cry'd ;)
 Heav'n knows (with that a tender sigh she drew)
 I have a soul to save as well as you ;
 And, what no less you to my charge commend,
 My dearest honour, will to death defend. 580
 To you in holy Church I gave my hand,
 And join'd my heart in wedlock's sacred band :
 Yet, after this, if you distrust my care,
 Then hear, my Lord, and witness what I swear :

First may the yawning earth her bosom rend,
 And let me hence to hell alive descend ; 586
 Or die the death I dread no less than hell,
 Sew'd in a sack, and plung'd into a well ;
 Ere I my fame by one lewd act disgrace,
 Or once renounce the honour of my race. 590
 For know, Sir Knight, of gentle blood I came,
 I loath a whore, and startle at the name.
 But jealous men on their own crimes reflect,
 And learn from thence their ladies to suspect :
 Else why these needless cautions, Sir, to me? 595
 These doubts and fears of female constancy !
 This chime still rings in ev'ry lady's ear,
 The only strain a wife must hope to hear.

Thus

Thus while she spoke a sidelong glance she cast,
 Where Damian kneeling, worship'd as she past : 600
 She saw him watch the motions of her eye,
 And singled out a pear-tree planted nigh :
 'Twas charg'd with fruit that made a goodly show,
 And hung with dangling pears was ev'ry bough.
 Thither th' obsequious Squire address'd his pace,
 And climbing, in the summit took his place ; 606
 The Knight and Lady walk'd beneath in view,
 Where let us leave them, and our tale pursue.

'Twas now the season when the glorious sun
 His heav'nly progress through the Twins had run ;
 And Jove, exalted, his mild influence yields, 611
 To glad the glebe, and paint the flow'ry fields :
 Clear was the day, and Phoebus rising bright,
 Had streak'd the azure firmament with light ;
 He pierc'd the glitt'ring clouds with golden streams,
 And warm'd the womb of earth with genial beams.

It so befel, in that fair morning tide,
 The Fairies sported on the garden side,
 And in the midst their Monarch and his Bride.
 So featly tripp'd the light-foot ladies round, 620
 The knights so nimbly o'er the green-sword bound,
 That scarce they bent the flow'rs, or touch'd the ground.

The dances ended, all the fairy train
 For pinks and daisies search'd the flow'ry plain ;
 While on a bank reclin'd of rising green, 625
 Thus, with a frown, the King bespoke his Queen.

'Tis too apparent, argue what you can,
 The treachery you women use to man :
 A thousand Authors have this truth made out,
 And sad experience leaves no room for doubt. 630

Heav'n rest thy spirit, noble Solomon,
 A wiser monarch never saw the sun :
 All wealth, all honours, the supreme degree
 Of earthly bliss, was well bestow'd on thee!
 For sagely hast thou said : Of all mankind, 635
 One only just, and righteous, hope to find :
 But should'st thou search the spacious world around
 Yet one good woman is not to be found.

Thus says the King who knew your wickedness ;
 The son of Sirach testifies no less.
 So may some wildfire on your bodies fall, 640
 Or some devouring plague consume you all ;
 As well you view the leacher in the tree,
 And well this honourable Knight you see :
 But since he's blind and old (a helpless case)
 His Squire shall cuckold him before your face. 645

Now by my own dread majesty I swear,
 And by this awful sceptre which I bear,
 No impious wretch shall 'scape unpunish'd long,
 That in my presence offers such a wrong.
 I will this instant undeceive the Knight, 650
 And, in the very act, restore his sight :
 And set the strumpet here in open view,
 A warning to these Ladies, and to you,
 And all the faithless sex, for ever to be true.

And

And will you so, reply'd the Queen, indeed, 655
 Now, by my mother's soul it is decreed,
 She shall not want an answer at her need.
 For her, and for her daughters, I'll engage,
 And all the sex in each succeeding age;
 Art shall be theirs to varnish an offence, 660
 And fortify their crimes with confidence.
 Nay, were they taken in a strict embrace,
 Seen with both eyes, and pinion'd on the place;
 All they shall need is to protest and swear,
 Breathe a soft sigh, and drop a tender tear; 665
 Till their wise husbands, gull'd by arts like these,
 Grow gentle, tractable, and tame as geese.

What tho' this slanderous Jew, this Solomon,
 Call'd women fools, and knew full many a one;
 The wiser wits of later times declare, 670
 How constant, chaste, and virtuous women are:
 Witness the martyrs, who resign'd their breath,
 Serene in torments, unconcern'd in death;
 And witness next what Roman authors tell,
 How Arria, Portia, and Lucretia fell. 675

But since the sacred leaves to all are free,
 And men interpret texts, why should not we?
 By this no more was meant, than to have shown,
 That sov'reign goodness dwells in him alone
 Who only Is, and is but only One. 680
 But grant the worst; shall women then be weigh'd
 By ev'ry word that Solomon has said?

What

What tho' this King (as ancient story boasts)
 Built a fair temple to the Lord of Hosts ;
 He ceas'd at last his Maker to adore, 685
 And did as much for Idol gods, or more.

Beware what lavish praises you confer
 On a rank leacher and idolater ;
 Whose reign indulgent God, says Holy Writ,
 Did but for David's righteous sake permit ; 690
 David, the monarch after Heav'n's own mind,
 Who lov'd our sex, and honour'd all our kind.

Well, I'm a Woman, and as such must speak ;
 Silence would swell me, and my heart would break.
 Know then, I scorn your dull authorities, 695
 Your idle wits, and all their learned lies.
 By Heav'n, those authors are our sex's foes,
 Whom, in our right, I must and will oppose.

Nay (quoth the King) dear Madam, be not wroth :
 I yield it up ; but since I gave my oath, 700
 That this much-injur'd Knight again should see ;
 It must be done—I am a King, said he,
 And one, whose faith has ever sacred been—

And so has mine (she said)—I am a Queen :
 Her answer she shall have, I undertake ; 705
 And thus an end of all dispute I make.
 Try when you list ; and you shall find, my Lord,
 It is not in our sex to break our word.

We leave them here in this heroic strain,
 And to the Knight our story turns again ; 710

Who

Who in the garden, with his lovely May,
 Sung merrier than the Cuckoo or the Jay :
 This was his song ; “ Oh kind and constant be,
 “ Constant and kind I’ll ever prove to thee.”

Thus singing as he went, at last he drew 715
 By easy steps, to where the Pear-tree grew :
 The longing dame look’d up, and spy’d her Love,
 Full fairly perch’d among the boughs above.
 She stopp’d, and sighing : Oh good Gods, she cry’d,
 What pangs, what sudden shoots distend my side ?
 O for that tempting fruit, so fresh, so green ; 721
 Help, for the love of heav’n’s immortal Queen !
 Help, dearest lord, and save at once the life
 Of thy poor infant, and thy longing wife !

Sore sigh’d the Knight to hear his Lady’s cry, 725
 But could not climb, and had no servant nigh :
 Old as he was, and void of eye-sight too,
 What could, alas ! a helpless husband do ?
 And must I languish then, she said, and die,
 Yet view the lovely fruit before my eye ? 730
 At least, kind Sir, for charity’s sweet sake,
 Vouchsafe the trunk between your arms to take ;
 Then from your back I might ascend the tree ;
 Do you but stoop, and leave the rest to me.

With all my soul, he thus reply’d again, 735
 I’d spend my dearest blood to ease thy pain.
 With that, his back against the trunk he bent,
 She seiz’d a twig, and up the tree she went,

Now

Now prove your patience, gentle Ladies all!
 Nor let on me your heavy anger fall : 740
 'Tis truth I tell, tho' not in phrase refin'd ;
 Tho' blunt my tale, yet honest is my mind.
 What feats the lady in the tree might do,
 I pass, as gambols never known to you ;
 But sure it was a merrier fit, she swore, 745
 Than in her life she ever felt before.

In that nice moment, lo! the wond'ring Knight
 Look'd out, and stood restor'd to sudden sight.
 Straight on the tree his eager eyes he bent,
 As one whose thoughts were on his spouse intent ;
 But when he saw his bosom-wife so dress'd, 751
 His rage was such as cannot be express'd :
 Not frantic mothers when their infants die,
 With louder clamours rend the vaulted sky : 754
 He cry'd, he roar'd, he storm'd, he tore his hair ;
 Death ! hell ! and furies ! what dost thou do there !

What ails my Lord ? the trembling dame reply'd ;
 I thought your patience had been better try'd ;
 Is this your love, ungrateful and unkind,
 This my reward for having cur'd the blind ? 760
 Why was I taught to make my husband see,
 By struggling with a man upon a Tree ?
 Did I for this the pow'r of Magic prove ?
 Unhappy wife, whose crime was too much love !

If

If this be struggling, by this holy light, 765
 'Tis struggling with a vengeance (quoth the Knight;)
 So heav'n preserve the fight it has restor'd,
 As with these eyes I plainly saw thee whor'd;
 Whor'd by my slave—perfidious wretch! may hell
 As surely seize thee, as I saw too well. 770

Guard me, good angels! cry'd the gentle May,
 Pray heav'n, this magic work the proper way!
 Alas, my love! 'tis certain, could you see,
 You ne'er had us'd these killing words to me:
 So help me, fates, as 'tis no perfect fight, 775
 But some faint glimm'ring of a doubtful light.

What I have said (quoth he) I must maintain,
 For by th' immortal pow'rs it seem'd too plain—

By all those pow'rs, some frenzy seiz'd your mind,
 (Reply'd the dame) are these the thanks I find? 780
 Wretch that I am, that e'er I was so kind!
 She said; a rising sigh express'd her woe,
 The ready tears apace began to flow,
 And as they fell she wip'd from either eye 784
 The drops (for women, when they list, can cry.)

The Knight was touch'd; and in his looks appear'd
 Signs of remorse, while thus his spouse he cheer'd:
 Madam, 'tis past; and my short anger o'er!
 Come down, and vex your tender heart no more;
 Excuse me, dear, if aught amiss was said, 790
 For, on my soul, amends shall soon be made:
 Let my repentance your forgiveness draw,
 By heaven, I swore but what I thought I saw.

Ah my lov'd lord! 'twas much unkind (she cry'd)
 On bare suspition thus to treat your bride. 795
 But till your sight's establish'd, for a while,
 Imperfect objects may your sense beguile.
 Thus when from sleep we first our eyes display,
 The balls are wounded with the piercing ray,
 And dusky vapours rise, and intercept the day : 800
 So just recov'ring from the shades of night,
 Your swimming eyes are drunk with sudden light,
 Strange phantoms dance around, and skim before your sight.

Then, Sir, be cautious, nor too rashly deem ;
 Heav'n knows how seldom things are what they seem ;
 Consult your reason, and you soon shall find 806
 'Twas you were jealous, not your wife unkind :
 Jove ne'er spoke oracle more true than this,
 None judge so wrong as those who think amiss.

With that she leap'd into her Lord's embrace 810
 With well-diffembled virtue in her face.
 He hugg'd her close, and kiss'd her o'er and o'er,
 Disturb'd with doubts and jealousies no more :
 Both, pleas'd and bless'd, renew'd their mutual vows,
 A fruitful wife, and a believing spouse. 815

Thus ends our tale, whose moral next to make,
 Let all wise husbands hence example take ;
 And pray, to crown the pleasure of their lives,
 To be so well deluded by their wives.

THE first dawnings of polite literature in Italy are found in tale-writing and fables.

To produce, and carry on with probability and decorum, a series of events, is the most difficult work of invention; and if we were minutely to examine the popular stories of every nation, we should be amazed to find how few circumstances have been ever invented. Facts and events have been indeed varied and modified; but totally new facts have not been created. The writers of the old romances, from whom Ariosto and Spencer have borrowed so largely, are supposed to have had copious imaginations; but may they not be indebted, for their invulnerable heroes, their monsters, their enchantments, their gardens of pleasure, their winged steeds, and the like, to the Echidna, to the Circe, to the Medea, to the Achilles, to the Syrens, to the Harpies, to the Phryxus, and the Bellerophon, of the ancients? The cave of Polypheme might furnish out the ideas of their giants, and Andromeda might give occasion for stories of distressed damsels on the point of being devoured by dragons, and delivered at such a critical season by their favourite Knights. Some faint traditions of the ancients might have been kept glimmering and alive during the whole barbarous ages, as they are called; and it is not impossible but these have been the parents of the Genii in the Eastern and the Fairies in the Western world. To say that Amadis and Sir Tristan have a classical foundation, may, at first sight, appear paradoxical; but if the subject were examined to the bottom, I am inclined to think, that the wildest chimeras in those books of chivalry, with which Don Quixote's library was furnished, would be found to have a close connection with ancient mythology.

We of this nation have been remarkably barren in our inventions of facts; we have been chiefly borrowers in this species of composition, as the plots of our most applauded tragedies and comedies may witness, which have generally been taken from the novels of the Italians and Spaniards.

THE WIFE OF BATH
HER PROLOGUE.

FROM CHAUCER.

THE WIFE OF BATH
HER PROLOGUE.

FROM CHAUCER.

THE Wife of Bath is the other piece of Chaucer which Pope selected to imitate. One cannot but wonder at his choice, which perhaps nothing but his youth could excuse. Dryden, who is known not to be nicely scrupulous, informs us, that he would not verify it on account of its indecency. Pope, however, has omitted or softened the grosser and more offensive passages. Chaucer afforded him many subjects of a more sublime and serious species; and it were to be wished Pope had exercised his pencil on the pathetic story of the patience of Griselda, or Troilus and Cressida, or the Complaint of the Black Knight; or, above all, on Cambuscan and Canace. From the accidental circumstance of Dryden and Pope's having copied the gay and ludicrous parts of Chaucer, the common notion seems to have arisen, that Chaucer's vein of poetry was chiefly turned to the light and the ridiculous. But they who look into Chaucer will soon be convinced of this prevailing prejudice, and will find his comic vein, like that of Shakspeare, to be only like one of mercury, imperceptibly mingled with a mine of gold.

Mr. Hughes withdrew his contributions to a volume of Miscellaneous Poems, published by Steel, because this prologue was to be inserted in it, which he thought too obscene for the gravity of his character.

“The want of a few lines,” says Mr. Tyrwhitt, “to introduce The Wife of Bath's Prologue, is perhaps one of those defects which Chaucer would have supplied, if he had lived to finish his work. The extraordinary length of it, as well as the vein of pleasantry that runs through it, is very suitable to the character of the speaker. The greatest part must have been of Chaucer's own invention, though one may plainly see that he had been reading the popular invectives against marriage and women in general; such as the Roman de la Rose, Valerius ad Rufinum de non ducendâ uxore, and particularly Hyeronimus contra Jovianum. The holy Father, by way of recommending celibacy, has exerted all his learning and eloquence (and he certainly was not deficient in either) to collect together and aggravate whatever he could find to the prejudice of the female sex. Among other things he has inserted his own translation (probably) of a long extract from what he calls, Liber aureolus Theophrasti de nuptiis. Next to him in order of time was the treatise, entitled, Epistola Valerii ad Rufinum de non ducendâ uxore, ns. Reg. 12. D. iii. It has been printed (for the similarity of its sentiments I suppose) among the works of St. Jerome, though it is evidently of a much later date. Tanner (from Wood's MSS. Collection) attributes it to Walter Map. (Bib. Brit. v. Map). I should not believe it to be older; as John of Salisbury, who has treated of the same subject in his Polycrat. l. viii. c. xi., does not appear to have seen it. To these two books Jean de Meun has been obliged for some of the severest strokes in his Roman de la Rose; and Chaucer has transfused the quintessence of all the three works (upon the subject of matrimony) into his Wife of Bath's Prologue and Merchant's Tale."

THE WIFE OF BATH.

FROM CHAUCER.

BEHOLD the woes of matrimonial life,
 And hear with rev'rence an experienc'd wife !
 To dear-bought wisdom give the credit due,
 And think, for once, a woman tells you true.
 In all these trials I have borne a part, 5
 I was myself the scourge that caus'd the smart ;
 For, since fifteen, in triumph have I led
 Five captive husbands from the church to bed.

Christ saw a wedding once, the Scripture says,
 And saw but one, 'tis thought, in all his days ; 10
 Whence some infer, whose conscience is too nice,
 No pious Christian ought to marry twice.

But let them read, and solve me, if they can,
 The words address'd to the Samaritan :
 Five times in lawful wedlock she was join'd ; 15
 And sure the certain stint was ne'er defin'd.

“ Encrease and multiply,” was Heav'n's command,
 And that's a text I clearly understand.
 This too, “ Let men their fires and mothers leave,
 “ And to their dearer wives for ever cleave.” 20
 More wives than one by Solomon were try'd,
 Or else the wisest of mankind's bely'd.

I've had myself full many a merry fit ;
 And trust in Heav'n I may have many yet.
 For when my transitory spouse, unkind, 25
 Shall die, and leave his woeful wife behind,
 I'll take the next good Christian I can find.

Paul, knowing one could never serve our turn,
 Declar'd 'twas better far to wed than burn.
 There's danger in assembling fire and tow ; 30
 I grant 'em that, and what it means you know.
 The same Apostle too has elsewhere own'd,
 No precept for Virginitie he found :
 'Tis but a counsel—and we women still
 Take which we like, the counsel, or our will. 35

I envy not their blifs, if he or she
 Think fit to live in perfect chastity ;
 Pure let them be, and free from taint or vice ;
 I, for a few slight spots, am not so nice.
 Heav'n calls us diff'rent ways, on these bestows 40
 One proper gift, another grants to those :
 Not every man's oblig'd to sell his store,
 And give up all his substance to the poor ;
 Such as are perfect, may, I can't deny ;
 But, by your leaves, Divines, so am not I. 45

Full many a Saint, since first the world began,
 Liv'd an unspotted maid, in spite of man :
 Let such (a God's name) with fine wheat be fed,
 And let us honest wives eat barley-bread.
 For me, I'll keep the post assign'd by heav'n, 50
 And use the copious talent it has giv'n :

Let my good spouse pay tribute, do me right,
 And keep an equal reck'ning ev'ry night :
 His proper body is not his, but mine ;
 For so said Paul, and Paul's a found divine. 55

Know then, of those five husbands I have had,
 Three were just tolerable, two were bad.

The three were old, but rich and fond beside,
 And toil'd most piteously to please their bride :
 But since their wealth (the best they had) was mine, 60
 The rest, without much loss, I could resign.
 Sure to be lov'd, I took no pains to please,
 Yet had more Pleasure far than they had Ease.

Presents flow'd in apace : with show'rs of gold,
 They made their court, like Jupiter of old. 65
 If I but smil'd, a sudden youth they found,
 And a new palsy seiz'd them when I frown'd.

Ye sov'reign wives ! give ear, and understand,
 Thus shall ye speak, and exercise command.
 For never was it giv'n to mortal man, 70
 To lie so boldly as we women can :
 Forswear the fact, tho' seen with both his eyes,
 And call your maids to witness how he lies.

Hark, old Sir Paul ! ('was thus I us'd to say)
 Whence is our neighbour's wife so rich and gay ? 75
 Treated, carefs'd, where'er she's pleas'd to roam—
 I sit in tatters, and immur'd at home.
 Why to her house dost thou so oft repair ?
 Art thou so am'rous ? and is she so fair ?

If I but see a cousin or a friend, 80
 Lord ! how you swell, and rage like any fiend !
 But you reel home, a drunken beastly bear,
 Then preach till midnight in your easy chair ;
 Cry, Wives are false, and every woman evil,
 And give up all that's female to the devil. 85

If poor (you say) she drains her husband's purse ;
 If rich, she keeps her priest, or something worse ;
 If highly born, intolerably vain,
 Vapours and pride by turns possess her brain,
 Now gayly mad, now sourly splanetic, 90
 Freakish when well, and fretful when she's sick.
 If fair, then chaste she cannot long abide,
 By pressing youth attack'd on ev'ry side :
 If foul, her wealth the lusty lover lures,
 Or else her wit some fool-gallant procures, 95
 Or else she dances with becoming grace,
 Or shape excuses the defects of face.
 There swims no goose so grey, but soon or late,
 She finds some honest gander for her mate.

Horses (thou say'st) and asses men may try, 100
 And ring suspected vessels ere they buy :
 But wives, a random choice, untry'd they take,
 They dream in courtship, but in wedlock wake ;
 Then, nor till then, the veil's remov'd away,
 And all the woman glares in open day. 105

You tell me, to preserve your wife's good grace,
 Your eyes must always languish on my face,

Your

Your tongue with constant flatt'ries feed my ear,
 And tag each sentence with, My life ! my dear !
 If by strange chance, a modest blush be rais'd, 110
 Be sure my fine complexion must be prais'd.
 My garments always must be new and gay,
 And feasts still kept upon my wedding-day.
 Then must my nurse be pleas'd, and fav'rite maid ;
 And endless treats, and endless visits paid, 115
 To a long train of kindred, friends, allies ;
 All this thou say'st, and all thou say'st are lies.

On Jenkin too you cast a squinting eye :
 What ! can your 'prentice raise your jealousy ?
 Fresh are his ruddy cheeks, his forehead fair, 120
 And like the burnish'd gold his curling hair.
 But clear thy wrinkled brow, and quit thy sorrow,
 I'd scorn your 'prentice, should you die to-morrow.

Why are thy chests all lock'd ? on what design ?
 Are not thy worldly goods and treasure mine ? 125
 Sir, I'm no fool ; nor shall you, by St. John,
 Have goods and body to yourself alone.
 One you shall quit, in spite of both your eyes —
 I heed not, I, the bolts, the locks, the spies.
 If you had wit, you'd say, " Go where you will, 130
 " Dear spouse, I credit not the tales they tell :
 " Take all the freedoms of a marry'd life ;
 " I know thee for a virtuous, faithful wife."

Lord ! when you have enough, what need you care
 How merrily soever others fare ? 135

Tho' all the day I give and take delight,
 Doubt not, sufficient will be left at night.
 'Tis but a just and rational desire,
 To light a taper at a neighbour's fire.

There's danger too, you think, in rich array, 146
 And none can long be modest that are gay:
 The Cat, if you but finge her tabby skin,
 The chimney keeps, and sits content within;
 But once grown sleek, will from her corner run,
 Sport with her tail, and wanton in the sun; 145
 She licks her fair round face, and frisks abroad,
 To show her furr, and to be catterwaw'd.

Lo thus, my friends, I wrought to my desires
 These three right ancient venerable fires.
 I told 'em, Thus you say, and thus you do, 150
 And told 'em false, but Jenkin swore 'twas true.
 I, like a dog, could bite as well as whine,
 And first complain'd, whene'er the guilt was mine.
 I tax'd them oft with wenching and amours,
 When their weak legs scarce dragg'd 'em out of doors;
 And swore the rambles that I took by night, 156
 Were all to spy what damfels they bedight.
 That colour brought me many hours of mirth;
 For all this wit is giv'n us from our birth.
 Heav'n gave to woman the peculiar grace 160
 To spin, to weep, and cully human race.
 By this nice conduct, and this prudent course,
 By murm'ring, wheedling, stratagem, and force,

I still

I still prevail'd, and would be in the right,
 Or curtain-lectures made a restless night. 165
 If once my husband's arm was o'er my side,
 What! so familiar with your spouse? I cry'd:
 I levied first a tax upon his need;
 Then let him—'twas a nicety indeed!
 Let all mankind this certain maxim hold, 170
 Marry who will, our sex is to be sold.
 With empty hands no taffels you can lure,
 But fulsome love for gain we can endure;
 For gold we love the impotent and old, 174
 And heave, and pant, and kifs, and cling, for gold.
 Yet with embraces, curses oft I mixt,
 Then kifs'd again, and chid and rail'd betwixt.
 Well, I may make my will in peace, and die,
 For not one word in man's arrears am I.
 To drop a dear dispute I was unable, 180
 Ev'n tho' the Pope himself had sat at table.
 But when my point was gain'd, then thus I spoke,
 " Billy, my dear, how sheepishly you look?
 " Approach, my spouse, and let me kifs thy cheek!
 " Thou should'st be always thus, resign'd and meek!
 " Of Job's great patience since so oft you preach,
 " Well should you practise, who so well can teach.
 " 'Tis difficult to do, I must allow,
 " But I, my dearest, will instruct you how.
 " Great is the blessing of a prudent wife, 190
 " Who puts a period to domestic strife.

“ One

“ One of us two must rule, and one obey ;
 “ And since in man right reason bears the sway,
 “ Let that frail thing, weak woman, have her way.
 “ The wives of all my family have rul’d 195
 “ Their tender husbands, and their passions cool’d.
 “ Fye, ’tis unmanly thus to sigh and groan ;
 “ What ! would you have me to yourself alone ?
 “ Why take me, Love ! take all and ev’ry part !
 “ Here’s your Revenge ! you love it at your heart.
 “ Would I vouchsafe to sell what nature gave, 201
 “ You little think what custom I could have,
 “ But see ! I’m all your own—nay hold—for shame !
 “ What means my dear—indeed—you are to blame.”

Thus with my first three Lords I past my life ;

A very woman, and a very wife. 206
 What sums from these old spouses I could raise,
 Procur’d young husbands in my riper days.
 Tho’ past my bloom, not yet decay’d was I,
 Wanton and wild, and chatter’d like a pye. 210
 In country dances still I bore the bell,
 And sung as sweet as ev’ning Philomel.
 To clear my quailpipe, and refresh my soul,
 Full oft I drain’d the spicy nut-brown bowl ! 214
 Rich luscious wines, that youthful blood improve,
 And warm the swelling veins to feats of love :
 For ’tis as sure as cold ingenders hail,
 A liqu’rish mouth must have a lech’rous tail ;
 Wine lets no lover unrewarded go,
 As all true gamesters by experience know. 220

But

But oh, good Gods! whene'er a thought I cast
On all the joys of youth and beauty past,
To find in pleasures I have had my part,
Still warms me to the bottom of my heart.
This wicked world was once my dear delight; 225
Now all my conquests, all my charms, good night!
The flour consum'd, the best that now I can,
Is e'en to make my market of the bran.

My fourth dear spouse was not exceeding true;
He kept, 'twas thought, a private miss or two: 230
But all that score I paid—as how? you'll say,
Not with my body, in a filthy way:
But I so dress'd, and danc'd, and drank, and din'd;
And view'd a friend, with eyes so very kind,
As stung his heart, and made his marrow fry, 235
With burning rage, and frantick jealousy.
His soul, I hope, enjoys eternal glory,
For here on earth I was his purgatory.
Oft, when his shoe the most severely wrung,
He put on careless airs, and fat and sung. 240
How fore I gall'd him, only heav'n could know,
And he that felt, and I that caus'd the woe.
He dy'd, when last from pilgrimage I came,
With other gossips, from Jerusalem;
And now lies buried underneath a Rood, 245
Fair to be seen, and rear'd of honest wood.
A tomb indeed, with fewer sculptures grac'd,
Than that Mausolus' pious widow plac'd,

Or

Or where inshrined the great Darius lay;
But cast on graves is merely thrown away. 250

The pit fill'd up, with turf we cover'd o'er;
So bless the good man's soul, I say no more.

Now for my fifth lov'd Lord, the last and best;
(Kind Heav'n afford him everlasting rest)

Full hearty was his love, and I can shew 255
The tokens on my ribs in black and blue;

Yet, with a knack, my heart he could have won,
While yet the smart was shooting in the bone.

How quaint an appetite in women reigns! 259
Free gifts we scorn, and love what costs us pains:

Let men avoid us, and on them we leap;
A glutted market makes provision cheap.

In pure good will I took this jovial spark,
Of Oxford he, a most egregious clerk.

He boarded with a widow in the town, 265
A trusty gossip, one dame Alison,

Full well the secrets of my soul she knew,
Better than e'er our parish Priest could do.

To her I told whatever could befall:
Had but my husband piss'd against a wall, 270

Or done a thing that might have cost his life,
She—and my niece—and one more worthy wife,

Had known it all: what most he would conceal,
To these I made no scruple to reveal.

Oft has he blush'd from ear to ear for shame, 275
That e'er he told a secret to his dame.

It so befel, in holy time of Lent,
 That oft a day I to this goffip went ;
 (My husband, thank my stars, was out of town)
 From house to house we rambled up and down, 280
 This clerk, myself, and my good neighbour Alse,
 To see, be seen, to tell, and gather tales.
 Visits to ev'ry Church we daily paid,
 And march'd in ev'ry holy Masquerade,
 The Stations duly, and the Vigils kept ; 285
 Not much we fasted, but scarce ever slept.
 At Sermons too I shone in scarlet gay,
 The wasting moth ne'er spoil'd my best array ;
 The cause was this, I wore it ev'ry day.
 'Twas when fresh May her early blossoms yields,
 This Clerk and I were walking in the fields. 291
 We grew so intimate, I can't tell how,
 I pawn'd my honour, and engag'd my vow,
 If e'er I laid my husband in his urn,
 That he, and only he, should serve my turn. 295
 We straight struck hands, the bargain was agreed ;
 I still have shifts against a time of need :
 The mouse that always trusts to one poor hole,
 Can never be a mouse of any soul.

I vow'd, I scarce could sleep since first I knew him,
 And durst be sworn he had bewitch'd me to him, 301
 If e'er I slept, I dream'd of him alone,
 And dreams foretel, as learned men have shown :
 All this I said ; but dreams, Sirs, I had none :

I follow'd but my crafty Crony's lore, 305
 Who bid me tell this lye—and twenty more.

Thus day by day, and month by month we past ;
 It pleas'd the Lord to take my spouse at last.
 I tore my gown, I foil'd my locks with dust,
 And beat my breasts, as wretched widows — must.
 Before my face my handkerchief I spread, 311
 To hide the flood of tears I did — not shed.
 The good man's coffin to the Church was born ;
 Around, the neighbours, and my clerk, to mourn.
 But as he march'd, good Gods! he show'd a pair
 Of legs and feet, so clean, so strong, so fair! 316
 Of twenty winters age he seem'd to be ;
 I (to say truth) was twenty more than he ;
 But vig'rous still, a lively buxom dame ;
 And had a wond'rous gift to quench a flame. 320
 A Conj'ror once, that deeply could divine,
 Assur'd me, Mars in Taurus was my sign.
 As the stars order'd, such my life has been :
 Alas, alas, that ever love was sin !
 Fair Venus gave me fire, and sprightly grace, 325
 And Mars assurance, and a dauntless face.
 By virtue of this pow'rful constellation,
 I follow'd always my own inclination.

But to my tale : A month scarce pass'd away,
 With dance and song we kept the nuptial day. 330
 All I possess'd I gave to his command,
 My goods and chattels, money, house, and land :

But

But oft repented, and repent it still ;
 He prov'd a rebel to my sov'reign will :
 Nay once by Heav'n he struck me on the face ; 335
 Hear but the fact, and judge yourselves the case.

Stubborn as any Lions was I ;
 And knew full well to raise my voice on high ;
 As true a rambler as I was before,
 And would be so, in spite of all he swore. 340

He, against this right sagely would advise,
 And old examples set before my eyes ;
 Tell how the Roman matrons led their life,
 Of Gracchus' mother, and Duilius' wife ;
 And close the sermon, as befeem'd his wit, 345
 With some grave sentence out of Holy Writ.

Oft would he say, who builds his house on sands,
 Pricks his blind horse across the fallow lands,
 Or lets his wife abroad with pilgrims roam,
 Deserves a fool's-cap and long ears at home. 350

All this avail'd not ; for whoe'er he be
 That tells my faults, I hate him mortally :
 And so do numbers more, I'll boldly say,
 Men, women, clergy, regular, and lay.

My spouse (who was, you know, to learning bred)
 A certain treatise oft at ev'ning read,
 Where divers Authors (whom the dev'l confound
 For all their lies) were in one volume bound.
 Valerius, whole ; and of St. Jerome, part ;
 Chryssippus and Tertullian, Ovid's Art, 360

Solomon's Proverbs, Eloïsa's loves ;
 And many more than fure the Church approves.
 More legends were there here, of wicked wives,
 Than good, in all the Bible and Saints-lives.
 Who drew the Lion vanquish'd ? 'Twas a Man.
 But could we women write as scholars can, 366
 Men should stand mark'd with far more wickedness
 Than all the fons of Adam could redress.
 Love seldom haunts the breast where Learning lies,
 And Venus sets ere Mercury can rise. 370
 Those play the scholars who can't play the men,
 And use that weapon which they have, their pen ;
 When old, and past the relish of delight,
 Then down they sit, and in their dotage write,
 That not one woman keeps her marriage-vow. 375
 (This by the way, but to my purpose now.)

It chanc'd my husband, on a winter's night,
 Read in this book, aloud, with strange delight,
 How the first female (as the Scriptures show)
 Brought her own spouse and all his race to woe.
 How Samson fell ; and he whom Dejanire 381
 Wrap'd in th' invenom'd shirt, and set on fire.
 How curs'd Eryphile her lord betray'd,
 And the dire ambush Clytemnestra laid.
 But what most pleas'd him was the Cretan dame, 385
 And husband-bull—oh monstrous ! fie for shame !

He had by heart, the whole detail of woe
 Xantippe made her good man undergo ;

How

How oft she scolded in a day, he knew,
 How many piss-pots on the sarge she threw; 390
 Who took it patiently, and wip'd his head;
 " Rain follows thunder : " that was all he said.

He read, how Arius to his friend complain'd,
 A fatal Tree was growing in his land,
 On which three wives successively had twin'd 395
 A sliding noose, and waver'd in the wind.

Where grows this plant (reply'd the friend) oh where?
 For better fruit did never orchard bear.
 Give me some slip of this most blissful tree,
 And in my garden planted shall it be. 400

Then how two wives their lords' destruction prove,
 Through hatred one, and one through too much love;
 That for her husband mix'd a pois'nous draught,
 And this for lust an am'rous philtre bought :
 The nimble juice soon seiz'd his giddy head, 405
 Frantic at night, and in the morning dead.

How some with swords their sleeping lords have slain,
 And some have hammer'd nails into their brain,
 And some have drench'd them with a deadly potion;
 All this he read, and read with great devotion. 410

Long time I heard, and swell'd, and blush'd, and frown'd ;
 But when no end of these vile tales I found,
 When still he read, and laugh'd, and read again,
 And half the night was thus consum'd in vain ;

Provok'd to vengeance, three large leaves I tore,
And with one buffet fell'd him on the floor. 416

With that my husband in a fury rose,
And down he settled me with hearty blows,
I groan'd, and lay extended on my side ;
Oh! thou hast slain me for my wealth (I cry'd) 420
Yet I forgive thee—take my last embrace—

He wept, kind soul! and stoop'd to kifs my face ;
I took him such a box as turn'd him blue,
Then sigh'd and cry'd, Adieu, my dear, adieu!

But after many a hearty struggle past, 425
I condescended to be pleas'd at last,

Soon as he said, My mistress and my wife,
Do what you list, the term of all your life ;
I took to heart the merits of the cause,

And stood content to rule by wholesome laws ; 430
Receiv'd the reins of absolute command,

With all the government of house and land,
And empire o'er his tongue, and o'er his hand.

As for the volume that revil'd the dames, 434
'Twas torn to fragments, and condemn'd to flames.

Now Heav'n, on all my husbands gone, bestow
Pleasures above, for tortures felt below :

That rest they wish'd for, grant them in the grave,
And bless those souls my conduct help'd to save!

THE lines of Pope, in the piece before us, are spirited and easy, and have, properly enough, a free colloquial air. One passage I cannot forbear quoting, as it acquaints us with the writers who were popular in the time of Chaucer. The jocosè old woman says, that her husband frequently read to her out of a volume that contained “ Valerius whole ; and of Saint Jerome part ;

Crypsippus and Tertullian, Ovid’s Art,

Solomon’s Proverbs, Eloisa’s loves :

With many more than fure the Church approves.”

VER. 359.

Pope has omitted a stroke of humour ; for, in the original, she naturally mistakes the rank and age of St. Jerome ; the lines must be transcribed,

“ Yclepid Valerie and Theophrast,

At which boke he lough alway full fast ;

And eke there was a clerk sometime in Rome,

A cardinal, that hightin St. Jerome,

That made a boke agentf Jovinian,

In which boke there was eke Tertullian,

Chrysippus, Trotula, and Helowis,

That was an abbefs not ferr fro Paris,

And eke the Parables of Solomon,

Ovid’ is art, and bokis many a one.”

In the library which Charles V. founded in France, about the year 1376, among many books of devotion, astrology, chemistry, and romance, there was not one copy of Tully to be found, and no Latin poet but Ovid, Lucan, and Boethius ; some French translations of Livy, Valerius Maximus, and St. Austin’s City of God. He placed these in one of the towers, called The Tower of the Library. This was the foundation of the present magnificent royal library at Paris.

The tale, to which this is the prologue, has been verified by Dryden, and is supposed to have been of Chaucer’s own invention ;

tion; as is the exquisite Vision of the Flower and the Leaf, which has received a thousand new graces from the spirited and harmonious Dryden. It is to his Fables, (next to his Music Ode), written when he was above seventy years old, that Dryden will chiefly owe his immortality; and among these, particularly to the well-conducted tale of Palamon and Arcite, the pathetic picture of Sigismunda, the wild and terrible graces of Theodore and Honoria, and the sportive pleasantries of Cymon and Iphigenia. It is mortifying and surprising to see the cold and contemptuous manner in which Dr. Johnson speaks of these capital pieces, which he says "require little criticism, and seem hardly worth the rejuvenescence (as he affectedly calls it) which Dryden has bestowed upon them." It is remarkable that, in his criticisms, he has not even mentioned the Flower and the Leaf.

These pieces of Chaucer were not the only ones that were versified by Pope. Mr. Harte assured me, that he was convinced by some circumstances which Fenton his friend communicated to him, that Pope wrote the characters that make the introduction to the Canterbury Tales, published under the name of Betterton.

STATIUS'S THEBANS.

TRANSLATED IN THE YEAR MDCCLIII.

IT was in his childhood only that he could make choice of so injudicious a writer as Statius to translate. It were to be wished that no youth of genius were suffered ever to look into Statius, Lucan, Claudian, or Seneca the tragedian; authors who, by their forced conceits, by their violent metaphors, by their swelling epithets, by their want of a just decorum, have a strong tendency to dazzle, and to mislead inexperienced minds, and tastes unformed, from the true relish of possibility, propriety, simplicity, and nature. Statius had undoubtedly invention, ability, and spirit; but his images are gigantic and outrageous, and his sentiments tortured and hyperbolic. It can hardly, I think, be doubted, but that Juvenal intended a severe satire on him in these well-known lines, which have been commonly interpreted as a panegyric:

“ Curritor ad vocem jucundam et carmen amicæ
Thebaidos, lætam fecit cum Statius urbem,
Promisque diem; tanta dulcedine captos
Afficit ille animos, tantaque libidine vulgi
Auditur: sed, cum fregit subsellia versu, Efurit.”

In these verses are many expressions, here marked with Italics, which seem to hint obliquely that Statius was the favourite poet of the vulgar, who were easily captivated with a wild and inartificial tale, and with an empty magnificence of numbers; the noisy roughness of which may be particularly alluded to in the expression, fregit subsellia versu. One cannot forbear reflecting on the short duration of a true taste in poetry among the Romans. From the time of Lucretius to that of Statius was no more than about one hundred and forty-seven years; and if I might venture to pronounce so rigorous a sentence, I would say, that the Romans can boast of but eight poets who are unexceptionably excellent; namely, Terence, Lucretius, Catullus, Virgil, Horace, Tibullus, Propertius, Phædrus. These only can be called legitimate models of just thinking and writing. Succeeding authors, as it happens in all countries, resolving to be original and new, and to avoid the imputation putation of copying, become distorted and unnatural: by endeavouring to open an unbeaten path, they deserted simplicity and truth; weary of common and obvious beauties, they must needs hunt for remote and artificial decorations. Thus was it that the age of Demetrius Phalerëus succeeded that of Demosthenes, and the false relish of Tiberius's court the chaste one of Augustus. Among the various causes, however, that have been assigned, why poetry and the arts have more eminently flourished in some particular ages and nations than in others, few have been satisfactory and adequate.

What solid reason can we give why the Romans, who so happily imitated the Greeks in many respects, and breathed a truly tragic spirit, could yet never excel in tragedy, though so fond of theatrical spectacles? Or why the Greeks, so fruitful in every species of poetry, yet never produced but one great epic poet? While, on the other hand, modern Italy can shew two or three illustrious epic writers; yet has no Sophocles, Euripides, or Mênander; and France, without having formed a single epopœa, has carried dramatic poetry to so much excellence in Corneille, Racine, and Moliere.

"Corruptio ad virtutem pervenit et cetera similia
 Theophrastus, de charact. lib. 1. c. 1.
 Affert hic sententiam Theophrasti
 Audiamus: sed cum sit in his Libris."

In these verses we may expect to find which form to him chiefly that Statius was the favourite poet of the vulgar, who were easily captivated with a wild and social tale, and with an easy magnificence of numbers; the thoughts of which may be particularly struck in the expression
 "Corruptio ad virtutem pervenit et cetera similia". Our author takes in this part of the Roman. From the time of Iocasta to that of Statius was no more than about hundred and forty years; and it might seem to be so narrow a distance, I would say, that the Romans can boast of but eight poets who are unexceptionally excellent; namely,
 Terence, Lucianus, Catullus, Virgil, Horace, Tibullus, Propertius, and Statius. This only can be called legitimate models of thinking and writing. Encouraging authors, as it happens in all countries, relating to the original and new, and to words the invented.

OEDIPUS King of Thebes having by mistake slain his father Laius, and married his mother Jocasta, put out his own eyes, and resigned his realm to his sons, Eteocles and Polynices. Being neglected by them, he makes his prayer to the Fury Tisiphone, to sow debate betwixt the brothers. They agree at last to reign singly, each a year by turns, and the first lot is obtained by Eteocles. Jupiter, in a council of the Gods, declares his resolution of punishing the Thebans, and Argives also, by means of a marriage betwixt Polynices and one of the daughters of Adrastus king of Argos. Juno opposes, but to no effect; and Mercury is sent on a message to the Shades, to the ghost of Laius, who is to appear to Eteocles, and provoke him to break the agreement. Polynices in the mean time departs from Thebes by night, is overtaken by a storm, and arrives at Argos; where he meets with Tydeus, who had fled from Calydon, having killed his brother. Adrastus entertains them, having received an oracle from Apollo that his daughters should be married to a Boar and a Lion, which he understands to be meant of these strangers, by whom the hides of those beasts were worn, and who arrived at the time when he kept an annual feast in honour of that God. The rise of this solemnity he relates to his guests, the loves of Phoebus and Psamathe, and the story of Choroebus. He enquires, and is made acquainted with their descent and quality: The sacrifice is renewed, and the book concludes with a Hymn to Apollo.

The Translator hopes he need not apologize for his choice of this piece, which was made almost in his childhood. But finding the version better than he expected, he gave it some correction a few years afterwards. P.

He was but fourteen years old.

NOTES.

VER. 19. But wave what'er] It is plain that Pope was not blind to the faults of Statius; many of which he points out with judgement and truth, in a letter to Mr. Cromwell, written 1708, vol. vii. p. 81.

The first attempt of Mr. Gray in English verse was a translation from Statius, sent to Mr. West 1736.

Juvenal was banished for commending the Agave of Statius.

Both the exordium and the conclusion of the Thebais are too violent and pompous, particularly the latter, in which he promises himself immortality from this poem.

Statius was a favourite writer with the poets of the middle ages. His bloated magnificence of description, gigantic images, and pompous diction, suited their taste, and were somewhat of a piece with the romances they so much admired. They neglected the gentler

VER. 65. Or how the Youth] Parthenopæus. P.

VER. 87. From Jocasta's womb] The great difference betwixt raising horror and terror is perceived and felt, from the reserved manner in which Sophocles speaks of the dreadful incest of Oedipus, and from the manner in which Statius has enlarged and dwelt upon it; in which he has been very unnaturally and injudiciously imitated by Dryden and Lee, who introduce this most unfortunate prince not only describing, but arguing on the dreadful crime he had committed. So likewise below, at verse 109, he behaves with the fury of a blustering bully, instead of that patient submission and pathetic remorse which are so suited to his condition. For this

Can pierce the darkness, and abhors the day;

The clear reflecting mind presents his sin

In frightful views, and makes it day within;

Returning thoughts in endless circles roll, 75

And thousand furies haunt his guilty soul,

The wretch then lifted up to th' unpitying skies

Those empty orbs from whence he tore his eyes,

Whose wounds, yet fresh, with bloody hands he strook,

While from his breast these dreadful accents broke. 80

 Nor here regrets the hell she late forfook.
 A hundred snakes her gloomy visage shade,
 A hundred serpents guard her horrid head, 145
 In her sunk eyeballs dreadful meteors glow :
 Such rays from Phoebe's bloody circle flow,
 When lab'ring with strong charms, she shoots from high
 A fiery gleam, and reddens all the sky.
 Blood stain'd her cheeks, and from her mouth there came 150
 Blue steaming poisons, and a length of flame.
 From ev'ry blast of her contagious breath
 Famine and drought proceed, and plagues, and death.
 A robe obscene was o'er her shoulders thrown,
 A dress by Fates and Furies worn alone. 155
 She tofs'd her meagre arms; her better hand
 In waving circles whirl'd a fun'ral brand :
 A serpent from her left was seen to rear
 His flaming crest, and lash the yielding air.
 But when the Fury took her stand on high, 160
 Where vast Cithaeron's top salutes the sky,
 A hiss from all the snaky tire went round :
 The dreadful signal all the rocks rebound,
 And through th' Achaian cities send the found.
 Oete, with high Parnassus, heard the voice ; 165
 Eurota's banks remurmur'd to the noise ;
 Again Leucothoë shook at these alarms,
 And press'd Palaemon closer in her arms,

NOTES.

VER. 173. Gentilisque animos subit furor, seems a better reading than Gentilesque. P.

Headlong from thence the glowing Fury springs,
 And o'er the Theban palace spreads her wings, 170
 Once more invades the guilty dome, and shrouds
 Its bright pavilions in a veil of clouds,
 Straight with the rage of all their race possess'd,
 Stung to the soul, the brothers start from rest,
 And all their Furies wake within their breast.

Their tortur'd minds repining Envy tears, 176
 And Hate, engender'd by suspicious fears:
 And sacred Thirst of sway; and all the ties
 Of Nature broke; and royal Perjuries;
 And impotent Desire to reign alone, 180
 That scorns the dull reversion of a throne;
 Each would the sweets of sov'reign rule devour,
 While discord waits upon divided pow'r.

As stubborn steers by brawny plowmen broke,
 And join'd reluctant to the galling yoke, 185
 Alike disdain with servile necks to bear
 Th' unwonted weight, or drag the crooked share,
 But rend the reins, and bound a diff'rent way,
 And all the furrows in confusion lay:
 Such was the discord of the royal pair, 190
 Whom fury drove precipitate to war.

In vain the chiefs contriv'd a specious way,
 To govern Thebes by their alternate sway:
 Unjust decree! while this enjoys the state,
 That mourns in exile his unequal fate, 195

NOTES.

VER. 201. Montibus] Instead of this violent word, Montibus, Pope judiciously says, Columns only.

And the short monarch of a hasty year
Foresees with anguish his returning heir.

Thus did the league their impious arms restrain,
But scarce subsisted to the second reign.

Yet then, no proud aspiring piles were rais'd, 200
No fretted roofs with polish'd metals blaz'd ;

No labour'd columns in long order plac'd,
No Grecian stone the pompous arches grac'd ;

No nightly bands in glitt'ring armour wait
Before the sleepless Tyrant's guarded gate ; 205

No chargers then were wrought in burnish'd gold,
Nor silver vases took the forming mold ;

Nor gems on bowls emboss'd were seen to shine,
Blaze on the brims, and sparkle in the wine—

Say, wretched rivals ! what provokes your rage ?
Say to what end your impious arms engage ? 210

Not all bright Phoebus views in early morn,
Or when his ev'ning beams the west adorn,

When the south glows with his meridian ray,
And the cold north receives a fainter day ; 215

For crimes like these, not all those realms suffice,
Were all those realms the guilty victor's prize !

But fortune now (the lots of empire thrown)
Decrees to proud Eteocles the crown :

NOTES.

VER. 219. Proud Eteocles] He has not borrowed so much from the Phœnissæ of Euripides as might have been hoped and expected, and which would so much have improved his poem. Racine was early struck with this story. Les Freres Ennemis was his first tragedy; and he was a reader of Euripides, being an excellent Greek scholar.

What joys, oh Tyrant! swell'd thy soul that day,
 When all were slaves thou could'st around survey,
 Pleas'd to behold unbounded pow'r thy own,
 And singly fill a fear'd and envy'd throne!

But the vile vulgar, ever discontent,
 Their growing fears in secret murmurs vent;
 Still prone to change, tho' still the slaves of state,
 And sure the monarch whom they have, to hate;
 New lords they madly make, then tamely bear,
 And softly curse the Tyrants whom they fear.
 And one of those who groan beneath the sway
 Of Kings impos'd, and grudgingly obey,
 (Whom envy to the great, and vulgar spite
 With scandal arm'd, th' ignoble mind's delight,)
 Exclaim'd—O Thebes! for thee what fates remain,
 What woes attend this inauspicious reign?
 Must we, alas! our doubtful necks prepare,
 Each haughty master's yoke by turns to bear,
 And still to change whom chang'd we still must fear?
 These now controul a wretched people's fate,
 These can divide, and these reverse the state: 240
 Ev'n Fortune rules no more!—O servile land,
 Where exil'd tyrants still by turns command!
 Thou fire of Gods and men, imperial Jove!
 Is this th' eternal doom decreed above?
 On thy own offspring hast thou fix'd this fate, 245

These now control a wretched people's fate :

Thou fire of Gods and men, imperial love !

Is this thy eternal doom decreed above ?

On thy own offspring hast thou fix'd this fate :

From the first birth of our unhappy state ;

When

When banish'd Cadmus, wand'ring o'er the main,
 For lost Europa search'd the world in vain,
 And fated in Boeotian fields to found
 A rising empire on a foreign ground, 250
 First rais'd our walls on that ill-omen'd plain,
 Where earth-born brothers were by brothers slain?
 What lofty looks th' unrivall'd monarch bears!
 How all the tyrant in his face appears!
 What fullen fury clouds his scornful brow! 255
 Gods! how his eyes with threat'ning ardour glow!
 Can this imperious lord forget to reign,
 Quit all his state, descend, and serve again?
 Yet, who, before, more popularly bow'd?
 Who more propitious to the suppliant croud? 260
 Patient of right, familiar in the throne?
 What wonder then? he was not then alone.
 O wretched we, a vile, submissive train,
 Fortune's tame fools, and slaves in ev'ry reign!

As when two winds with rival force contend, 265
 This way and that, the wav'ring sails they bend,
 While freezing Boreas, and black Eurus blow,
 Now here, now there, the reeling vessel throw:
 Thus on each side, alas! our tott'ring state,
 Feels all the fury of resistless fate, 270
 And doubtful still, and still distracted stands,
 While that prince threatens, and while this commands.

And now th' almighty Father of the Gods
 Convenes a council in the blest abodes:

VER. 281.] Placido quatiens tamen omnia vultu, is the common reading; I believe it should be nutu, with reference to the word quatiens. P.

Far in the bright recesses of the skies, 273
 High o'er the rolling heav'ns, a mansion lies,
 Whence, far below, the Gods at once survey
 The realms of rising and declining day,
 And all th' extended space of earth, and air, and sea.
 Full in the midst, and on a starry Throne, 280
 The Majesty of heav'n superior shone;
 Serene he look'd, and gave an awful nod,
 And all the trembling spheres confess'd the God.
 At Jove's assent the deities around
 In solemn state the consistory crown'd. 285
 Next a long order of inferior pow'rs
 Ascend from hills, and plains, and shady bow'rs;
 Those from whose urns the rolling rivers flow;
 And those that give the wand'ring winds to blow:
 Here all their rage, and ev'n their murmurs cease,
 And sacred silence reigns, and universal peace. 291
 A shining synod of majestic Gods
 Gilds with new lustre the divine abodes;
 Heav'n seems improv'd with a superior ray,
 And the bright arch reflects a double day. 295
 The Monarch then his solemn silence broke,
 The still creation listen'd while he spoke,
 Each sacred accent bears eternal weight,
 And each irrevocable word is Fate. 299
 How long shall man the wrath of heav'n defy,
 And force unwilling vengeance from the sky!

Th' Aeolian forge exhausted of its fires.

For this, I suffer'd Phoebus' steeds to stray,
And the mad ruler to misguide the day;

When the wide earth to heaps of ashes turn'd, 310
And heav'n itself the wand'ring chariot burn'd.

VER. 329. Proprios monstro revolutus in ortus.] This is a line insufferably gross, unnatural, and offensive; and the translation, verse 333, is equally so.

Th' exulting mother, stain'd with filial blood ;
 The savage hunter and the haunted wood ?
 The direful banquet why should I proclaim, 325
 And crimes that grieve the trembling Gods to name ?
 Ere I recount the sins of these profane,
 The sun would sink into the western main,
 And rising gild the radiant east again.
 Have we not seen (the blood of Laius shed) 330
 The murd'ring son ascend his parent's bed,
 Through violated nature force his way,
 And stain the sacred womb where once he lay ?
 Yet now in darkness and despair he groans,
 And for the crimes of guilty fate atones ; 335
 His sons with scorn their eyeless father view,
 Insult his wounds, and make them bleed anew.
 Thy curse, oh Oedipus, just heav'n alarms,
 And sets th' avenging thunderer in arms.
 I from the root thy guilty race will tear, 340
 And give the nations to the waste of war.
 Adrastus soon, with Gods averse, shall join
 In dire alliance with the Theban line ;
 Hence strife shall rise, and mortal war succeed ;
 The guilty realms of Tantalus shall bleed ; 345
 Fix'd is their doom ; this all-rememb'ring breast
 Yet harbours vengeance for the tyrant's feast.

He said ; and thus the Queen of heav'n return'd ;

Thou know'st those regions my protection claim,
 Glorious in arms, in riches, and in fame:
 Tho' there the fair Egyptian heifer fed,
 And there deluded Argus slept, and bled ; 355
 Tho' there the brazen tow'r was storm'd of old,
 When Jove descended in almighty gold :
 Yet I can pardon those obscurer rapes,
 Those bashful crimes disguis'd in borrow'd shapes ;
 But Thebes, where shining in celestial charms 360
 Thou cam'st triumphant to a mortal's arms,
 When all my glories o'er her limbs were spread,
 And blazing light'nings danc'd around her bed ;
 Curs'd Thebes the vengeance it deserves, may prove—
 Ah why should Argos feel the rage of Jove? 365
 Yet since thou wilt thy sister-queen controul,
 Since still the lust of discord fires thy soul,
 Go, raise my Samos, let Mycene fall,
 And level with the dust the Spartan wall ;
 No more let mortals Juno's pow'r invoke, 370
 Her fanes no more with eastern incense smoke,
 Nor victims sink beneath the sacred stroke ;
 But to your Isis all my rites transfer,
 Let altars blaze and temples smoke for her ;
 For her, through Egypt's fruitful clime renown'd,
 Let weeping Nilus hear the timbrel sound. 376
 But if thou must reform the stubborn times,
 Avenging on the sons the father's crimes,
 And from the long records of distant age
 Derive incitements to renew thy rage ; 380

Say, from what period then has Jove design'd
To date his vengeance; to what bounds confin'd?

Begin from thence, where first Alpheus hides
His wand'ring stream, and through the briny tides
Unmix'd to his Sicilian river glides. 385

Thy own Arcadians there the thunder claim,
Whose impious rites disgrace thy mighty name;
Who raise thy temples where the chariot stood
Of fierce Oenomäus, defil'd with blood; 389
Where once his steeds their savage banquet found,
And human bones yet whiten all the ground.

Say, can those honours please; and can'st thou love
Presumptuous Crete that boasts the tomb of Jove?

And shall not Tantalus's kingdoms share
Thy wife and sister's tutelary care? 395

Reverse, O Jove, thy too severe decree,
Nor doom to war a race deriv'd from thee;
On impious realms and barb'rous Kings impose
Thy plagues, and curse 'em with such sons as those.

Thus, in reproach and pray'r, the Queen express'd
The rage and grief contending in her breast; 401

Unmov'd remain'd the ruler of the sky,
And from his throne return'd this stern reply:
'Twas thus I deem'd thy haughty soul would bear
The dire, though just, revenge which I prepare 405
Against a nation thy peculiar care:

VER. 418. Give up] Sophocles never thought of bringing the ghost of Laius on the stage, as Seneca, who so often oversteps the bounds of nature, has done in a passage of bombast imagery and sentiment, and in which he has been followed by Dryden and Lee. The lines of incantations in the third act, which was written by Dryden, are exquisitely solemn and harmonious:

“ Chuse the darkest part o'th' grove,
 Such as ghosts at noon-day love;
 Dig a trench, and dig it nigh
 Where the bones of Laius lie;”

NOTAE

Dejecto

VER. 418. Circa sp. Sophocles never thought of placing the ghost of Laius on the stage, as Oedipus, who is often overtopped the power of nature, has done in a palace of boundless magnificence and splendour, and in which he has been followed by Jocasta and her children, and the time of incantation in the third act, which was written by Sophocles, are expressly taken and transferred
" Check the dust of your feet
Such as ghosts at midnight
By a torch, and by a sign
White the bones of Laius lie," and the next thirty lines

Be this the cause of more than mortal hate :
The rest, succeeding times shall ripen into Fate.

The God obeys, and to his feet applies
Those golden wings that cut the yielding skies, 430
His ample hat his beamy locks o'erspread,
And veil'd the starry glories of his head.
He seiz'd the wand that causes sleep to fly,
Or, in soft slumbers seals the wakeful eye ;
That drives the dead to dark Tartarean coasts, 435
Or back to life compels the wand'ring ghosts.
Thus, through the parting clouds, the son of May
Wings on the whistling winds his rapid way ;
Now smoothly steers through air his equal flight,
Now springs aloft, and tow'rs the ethereal height ;
Then wheeling down the steep of heav'n he flies,
And draws a radiant circle o'er the skies. 442

Mean time the banish'd Polynices roves
(His Thebes abandon'd) through th' Aonian groves,
While future realms his wand'ring thoughts delight,
His daily vision and his dream by night ;

And live out all in one triumphant day.
He chides the lazy progress of the sun,
And bids the year with swifter motion run.

And all his joys in length of wishes lost.

The hero then resolves his course to bend
Where ancient Danaus' fruitful fields extend,
And fam'd Mycene's lofty tow'rs ascend,
(Where late the sun did Atreus' crimes detest, 460
And disappear'd in horror of the feast,)
And now by chance, by fate, or furies led,
From Bacchus' consecrated caves he fled,
Where the shrill cries of frantic matrons sound,
And Pentheus' blood enrich'd the rising ground. 465
Then sees Cithaeron tow'ring o'er the plain,
And thence declining gently to the main.
Next to the bounds of Nifus' realm repairs,
Where treach'rous Scylla cut the purple hairs :
The hanging cliffs of Scyron's rock explores, 470
And hears the murmurs of the diff'rent shores :
Passes the strait that parts the foaming seas,
And stately Corinth's pleasing site surveys.

'Twas now the time when Phoebus yields to night,
And rising Cynthia sheds her silver light, 475
Wide o'er the world in solemn pomp she drew,
Her airy chariot hung with pearly dew ;

VER. 465. Pentheus'] There is much poetical enthusiasm in Theocritus's description of the death of Pentheus. Idyllium 26.

VER. 474. 'Twas now] We have scarcely in our language eight more beautiful lines than these, down to "human care."

NOTAE

Var. 482. [Tantum] There is much poetical emphasis in Tropicus's description of the death of Pentheus. Idyllium 20.
 Var. 484. [Tantum] We have already in our language
 "right more beautiful lines than they" down to "human care".
 Var. 481.

All birds and beasts lie hush'd; sleep steals away
 The wild desires of men, and toils of day,
 And brings, descending through the silent air, 480
 A sweet forgetfulness of human care.
 Yet no red clouds, with golden borders gay,
 Promise the skies the bright return of day;
 No faint reflections of the distant light
 Streak with long gleams the scatt'ring shades of night;
 From the damp earth impervious vapours rise, 486
 Encrease the darkness, and involve the skies.
 At once the rushing winds with roaring sound
 Burst from th' Aeolian caves, and rend the ground,
 With equal rage their airy quarrel try, 490
 And win by turns the kingdom of the sky?
 But with a thicker night black Auster shrouds
 The heav'ns, and drives on heaps the rolling clouds,
 From whose dark womb a rattling tempest pours,
 Which the cold north congeals to haily show'rs. 495
 From pole to pole the thunder roars aloud,
 And broken light'nings flash from ev'ry cloud.
 Now smoaks with show'rs the misty mountain-ground,
 And floated fields lie undistinguish'd round.
 Th' Inachian streams with headlong fury run, 500
 And Erasinus rolls a deluge on:
 The foaming Lerna swells above its bounds,
 And spreads its ancient poisons o'er the grounds:

VER. 490. Airy quarrel] A very faulty expression; as also below, verse 501—rolls a deluge on.

NOTES.

Var. for, 'not answer'd' A not fairly expounded, 'not below, 'not' - 'not' a deluge on

Where late was dust, now rapid torrents play,
 Rush through the mounds, and bear the damms away:
 Old limbs of trees from crackling forests torn,
 Are whirl'd in air, and on the winds are born:
 The storm the dark Lycaean groves display'd,
 And first to light expos'd the sacred shade.
 Th' intrepid Theban hears the bursting sky, 510
 Sees yawning rocks in massy fragments fly,
 And views astonish'd, from the hills afar,
 The floods descending, and the wat'ry war,
 That, driv'n by storms and pouring o'er the plain,
 Swept herds, and hinds, and houses to the main.
 Through the brown horrors of the night he fled,
 Nor knows, amaz'd, what doubtful path to tread;
 His brother's image to his mind appears,
 Inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet with fears.

So fares a sailor on the stormy main, 520
 When clouds conceal Boötes' golden wain,
 When not a star its friendly lustre keeps,
 Nor trembling Cynthia glimmers on the deeps;
 He dreads the rocks, and shoals, and seas, and skies,
 While thunder roars, and light'ning round him flies,

Thus strove the chief, on ev'ry side distress'd,
 Thus still his courage, with his toils increas'd;
 With his broad shield oppos'd, he forc'd his way
 Through thickest woods, and rous'd the beasts of prey.
 Till he beheld, where from Lariffa's height 530
 The shelving walls reflect a glancing light:

 Ora,

Thither with haste the Theban hero flies ;
 On this side Lerna's pois'nous water lies,
 On that Profymna's grove and temple rise :
 He pass'd the gates which then unguarded lay, 535
 And to the regal palace bent his way ;
 On the cold marble, spent with toil, he lies,
 And waits till pleasing slumbers seal his eyes.

Adrastus here his happy people sways,
 Blest with calm peace in his declining days, 540
 By both his parents of descent divine,
 Great Jove and Phoebus grac'd his noble line :
 Heav'n had not crown'd his wishes with a son,
 But two fair daughters heir'd his state and throne.
 To him Apollo (wond'rous to relate ! 545
 But who can pierce into the depths of fate ?)
 Had sung—" Expect thy sons on Argos' shore,
 " A yellow lion and a bristly boar."
 This long revolv'd in his paternal breast,
 Sate heavy on his heart, and broke his rest ; 550
 This, great Amphiaraus, lay hid from thee,
 Tho' skill'd in fate, and dark futurity,
 The father's care and prophet's art were vain,
 For thus did the predicting God ordain.

Lo hapless Tydeus, whose ill-fated hand 555
 Had slain his brother, leaves his native land,
 And seiz'd with horror in the shades of night,
 Through the thick deserts headlong urg'd his flight :
 Now by the fury of the tempest driv'n,
 He seeks a shelter from th' inclement heav'n, 560
 Till,

Till, led by fate, the Theban's steps he treads,
And to fair Argos' open court succeeds.

When thus the chiefs from diff'rent lands resort
T' Adrastus' realms, and hospitable court ;
The king furveys his guests with curious eyes, 565
And views their arms and habit with surprize.
A lion's yellow skin the Theban wears,
Horrid his mane, and rough with curling hairs ;
Such once employ'd Alcides' youthful toils,
Ere yet adorn'd with Nemea's dreadful spoils. 570
A boar's stiff hide, of Calydonian breed,
Oenides' manly shoulders overspread,
Oblique his tusks, erect his bristles stood,
Alive, the pride and terror of the wood.

Struck with the sight, and fix'd in deep amaze, 575
The King th' accomplish'd oracle furveys,
Reveres Apollo's vocal caves, and owns
The guiding Godhead, and his future sons.
O'er all his bosom secret transports reign,
And a glad horror shoots through ev'ry vein. 580
To heav'n he lifts his hands, erects his sight,
And thus invokes the silent Queen of night.

Long lost and wither'd in the maze of fate!
 O! thou who steal me from my doubtful fate,
 Wakes to new vigour with the rising day
 Thy gain'd by thy inspiring ray

Be present still, oh Goddess! in our aid; 590

Proceed, and firm those omens thou hast made.

We to thy name our annual rites will pay,

And on thy altars sacrifices lay;

The sable flock shall fall beneath the stroke,

And fill thy temples with a grateful smoke. 595

Hail, faithful Tripos! hail, ye dark abodes

Of awful Phoebus: I confess the Gods!

Thus, seiz'd with sacred fear, the monarch pray'd;

Then to his inner court the guests convey'd;

Where yet thin fumes from dying sparks arise, 600

And dust yet white upon each altar lies,

The relicks of a former sacrifice.

The King once more the solemn rites requires,

And bids renew the feasts, and wake the fires.

His train obey, while all the courts around 605

With noisy care and various tumult sound.

Embroider'd purple clothes the golden beds;

This slave the floor, and that the table spreads;

A third dispels the darkness of the night,

And fills depending lamps with beams of light;

Here loaves in canisters are pil'd on high, 611

And there in flames the slaughter'd victims fly.

Sublime in regal state Adrastus shone,

Stretch'd on rich carpets on his iv'ry throne;

A lofty couch receives each princely guest; 615

Around, at awful distance, wait the rest.

And now the king, his royal feast to grace,

Acestis calls, the guardian of his race,

 And less of terror in their looks appears,

 Their downcast looks a decent shame confess'd,
 Then on their father's rev'rend features rest.

This golden bowl with gen'rous juice was crown'd,
 The first libations sprinkled on the ground,
 By turns on each celestial pow'r they call; 650
 With Phoebus' name resounds the vaulted hall.
 The courtly train, the strangers, and the rest,
 Crown'd with chaste laurel, and with garlands dress'd,
 While with rich gums the fuming altars blaze,
 Salute the God in num'rous hymns of praise. 655

Then thus the King: Perhaps, my noble guests,
 These honour'd altars, and these annual feasts
 To bright Apollo's awful name design'd,
 Unknown, with wonder may perplex your mind.
 Great was the cause; our old solemnities 660
 From no blind zeal, or fond tradition rise;
 But sav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
 These grateful honours to the God of Day.

When by a thousand darts the Python slain
 With orbs unroll'd lay cov'ring all the plain, 665
 (Transfix'd as o'er Castalia's streams he hung,
 And suck'd new poisons with his triple tongue)
 To Argos' realms the victor god resorts,
 And enters old Crotopus' humble courts.

Fair was her face, and spotless was her mind,
 Where filial love with virgin sweetness join'd.
 Happy! and happy still she might have prov'd,
 Were she less beautiful, or less belov'd! 675

But Phoebus lov'd, and on the flow'ry side
 Of Nemea's stream, the yielding fair enjoy'd:
 Now, ere ten moons their orb with light adorn,
 Th' illustrious offspring of the God was born,
 The Nymph, her father's anger to evade, 680
 Retires from Argos to the sylvan shade;
 To woods and wilds the pleasing burden bears,
 And trusts her infant to a shepherd's cares.

How mean a fate, unhappy child! is thine?
 Ah how unworthy those of race divine? 685
 On flow'ry herbs in some green covert laid,
 His bed the ground, his canopy the shade,
 He mixes with the bleating lambs his cries,
 While the rude swain his rural music tries
 To call soft slumbers on his infant eyes. 690

Yet ev'n in those obscure abodes to live,
 Was more, alas! than cruel fate would give,
 For on the grassy verdure as he lay,
 And breath'd the freshness of the early day,
 Devouring dogs the helpless infant tore, 695
 Fed on his trembling limbs, and lapp'd the gore.
 Th' astonish'd mother, when the rumour came,
 Forgets her father, and neglects her fame,
 With loud complaints she fills the yielding air,
 And beats her breast, and rends her flowing hair;

 Devours young babes before their parents eyes,
 And feeds and thrives on public miseries.

“ See the grisly texture grow,

 And the weights that play below,
 Each a gasping warrior's head !”

Which I have heard critics of weak nerves, and affected sensibility, complain of as too horrid !

And in their hearts embrues her cruel claws.

The youths surround her with extended spears;
But brave Choroebus in the front appears,

Deep in her breast he plung'd his shining sword, 725
And hell's dire monster back to hell restor'd.

Th' Inachians view the slain with vast surprize,
Her twisting volumes and her rolling eyes,

Her spotted breast, and gaping womb embru'd
With livid poison, and our children's blood. 730

The croud in stupid wonder fix'd appear,
Pale ev'n in joy, nor yet forget to fear.

Some with vast beams the squalid corpse engage,
And weary all the wild efforts of rage.

The birds obscene, that nightly flock'd to taste, 735
With hollow screeches fled the dire repast;

And rav'nous dogs, allur'd by scented blood,
And starving wolves, ran howling to the wood.

But fir'd with rage, from cleft Parnassus' brow
Avenging Phoebus bent his deadly bow, 740

And hissing flew the feather'd fates below:
A night of fultry clouds involv'd around

The tow'rs, the fields, and the devoted ground:
And

VER. 743.] Vida thus justly characterizes Ovid and Statius, which might have deterred our young author from imitating two writers of so bad a taste:

Vota

And now a thousand lives together fled,
 Death with his scythe cut off the fatal thread, 475
 And a whole province in his triumph led.

But Phoebus ask'd why noxious fires appear,
 And raging Sirius blasts the sickly year ;
 Demands their lives by whom his monster fell,
 And dooms a dreadful sacrifice to hell. 750

Blest be thy dust, and let eternal fame
 Attend thy Manes, and preserve thy name,
 Undaunted hero ! who divinely brave,
 In such a cause disdain'd thy life to save ;
 But view'd the shrine with a superior look, 755
 And its upbraided Godhead thus bespoke :

With piety, the soul's securest guard,
 And conscious virtue, still its own reward,
 Willing I come, unknowing how to fear ;
 Nor shalt thou, Phoebus, find a suppliant here. 760
 Thy monster's death to me was ow'd alone,
 And 'tis a deed too glorious to disown.

Behold him here, for whom, so many days,
 Impervious clouds conceal'd thy fullen rays ;
 For whom, as Man no longer claim'd thy care, 765
 Such numbers fell by pestilential air !

But if th' abandon'd race of human kind
 From Gods above no more compassion find ;
 If such inclemency in heav'n can dwell,
 Yet why must unoffending Argos feel 770
 The vengeance due to this unlucky steel ?

On me, on me, let all thy fury fall,
 Nor err from me, since I deserve it all:
 Unless our desert cities please thy fight,
 Or fun'ral flames reflect a grateful light.
 Discharge thy shafts, this ready bosom rend,
 And to the shades a ghost triumphant send;
 But for my Country let my fate atone,
 Be mine the vengeance, as the crime my own.

Merit distress'd, impartial heav'n relieves: 775
 Unwelcome life relenting Phoebus gives;
 For not the vengeful pow'r, that glow'd with rage,
 With such amazing virtue durst engage.

The clouds dispers'd, Apollo's wrath expir'd, 784
 And from the wond'ring God th'unwilling youth retir'd.
 Thence we these altars in his temple raise,
 And offer annual honours, feasts, and praise;
 These solemn feasts propitious Phoebus please:
 These honours, still renew'd, his ancient wrath appease.

But say, illustrious guest, (adjoin'd the King) 790
 What name you bear, from what high race you spring?
 The noble Tydeus stands confess'd, and known
 Our neighbour Prince, and heir of Calydon,
 Relate your fortunes, while the friendly night
 And silent hours to various talk invite. 795

The Theban bends on earth his gloomy eyes,
 Confus'd, and sadly thus at length replies:
 Before these altars how shall I proclaim

Or through what veins our ancient blood has roll'd?
Let the sad tale for ever rest untold! 801

Yet if propitious to a wretch unknown,
You seek to share in sorrows not your own;
Know then from Cadmus I derive my race,
Jocasta's son, and Thebes my native place, 805

To whom the King (who felt his gen'rous breast Touch'd with concern for his unhappy guest)

Replies:—Ah why forbears the son to name
His wretched father known too well by fame?

Fame, that delights around the world to stray, 810
Scorns not to take our Argos in her way;

Ev'n those who dwell where suns at distance roll,
In northern wilds, and freeze beneath the pole;

And those who tread the burning Libyan lands,
The faithless Syrtes and the moving sands; 815

Who view the western sea's extremest bounds,
Or drink of Ganges in their eastern grounds;

All these the woes of Oedipus have known,
Your fates, your furies, and your haunted town.

If on the sons the parents crimes descend, 820
What Prince from those his lineage can defend?

Be this thy comfort, that 'tis thine t' efface
With virtuous acts thy ancestor's disgrace,

And be thyself the honour of thy race.
But see! the stars begin to steal away, 825

And shine more faintly at approaching day;
Now pour the wine; and in your tuneful lays

Once more resound the great Apollo's praise.

VER. 829. Some of the most finished lines he has ever written, down to verse 854.

VER. 841. 'Tis thine] Far superior to the original are these four lines; and how mean is the Tityus of Statius, compared with the tremendous picture in Virgil! May I venture to add, that we have in our language some translations that have excelled the originals; perhaps they are, Rowe's Lucan, Pitt's Vida, Hampton's Polybius, Melmoth's Pliny, and Carter's Epictetus.

Te viridis Python, Thebanaque mater ovantem,
 Horruit in pharetris. ultrix tibi torva Megaera 850
 Jejunum Phlegyam subter cava faxa jacentem

 Dexter ames; seu te roseum Titana vocari
 Gentis Achaemeniae ritu, seu praestat Ofirin
 Frugiferum, seu Persei sub rupibus antri
 Indignata sequi torquentem cornua Mitram.

NOTES.

VER. 850. Torva Megaera] This expression, and premit and instimulat, are weakened in the translation; but mista fastidia is a harsh expression; as also is a line above, 842, Tu Phryga submittis citbarae.

Thy hand slew Python, and the dame who lost
Her num'rous offspring for a fatal boast. 850

In Phlegyas' doom thy just revenge appears,
Condemn'd to Furies and eternal fears ;
He views his food, but dreads, with lifted eye,
The mouldring rock that trembles from on high.

Propitious hear our pray'r, O Pow'r divine! 855
And on thy hospitable Argos shine,
Whether the stile of Titan please thee more,
Whose purple rays th' Achaemenes adore ;
Or great Osiris, who first taught the swain
In Pharian fields to sow the golden grain; 860
Or Mitra, to whose beams the Persian bows,
And pays, in hollow rocks, his awful vows ;
Mitra, whose head the blaze of light adorns,
Who grasps the struggling heifer's lunar horns.

IN order to give young readers a just notion of chasteness and simplicity of style, I have seen it of use to let them compare the mild majesty of Virgil and the violent exuberance of Statius, by reading ten lines of each immediately after one another. The motto for the style of the age of Augustus may be the "Simplex Munditiis" of Horace ; for the age of Domitian and the succeeding ages, the "Cultûque laborat Multiplici" of Lucan. After this censure of Statius's manner, it is but justice to add, that in The Thebais there are many strokes of a strong imagination ; and indeed the picture of Amphiarus, swallowed up suddenly by a chasm that opened in the ground, is truly sublime :

"Illum ingens haurit specus, & transire parantes,
Mergit equos ; non arma manu non frena remisit
Sicut erat, rectos desert in Tartara currus,
Respexitq. cadens cœlum, campumq. coire
Ingemuit !"

Thy hand flew Egeon, and the dame who lost
 Her ruin'd looks offering for a fatal host.
 In Phlegyas' doom thy just revenge appears,

 The mould'ring rock that trembles from on high.
 Propitious hear our pray'r, O Pow'r divine!
 And on thy hospitable Argos shine,
 Whether the life of Eteon pleads, thee protesting Whole purple says th' Achaemenes shore;
 Or great Othris, who first taught the twin
 In Pharian fields to sow the golden grain;
 Or Minis, to whose beams the Persian bows,
 And pays, in hollow rocks, his awful vows;
 Minis, whose head the blaze of light adorns,
 Who grasps the struggling heifer's lunar horns.

IN order to give young readers a just notion of chaste and simplicity of style, I have been it of use to let them compare the mild majesty of Virgil and the violent exuberance of Statius, by reading the lines of each immediately after one another. The motto for the style of the age of Augustus may be the "Simpliciter Manducatis" of Horace; for the age of Domitian and the second century, the "Cultusque laborat Multipliciter" of Lucan. After the exaltation of Statius's manner, it is but justice to add, that in the Thebais there are many strokes of a strong imagination; and in the picture of Amphion, swallowed up suddenly by a chasm that opened in the ground, is truly sublime:

"Illum ingens haerit specus, & transit perennis
 Mergit opus; non arua manu non laeva remittit
 Sic ut erat nescit in Tartara curus,
 Respergit, vadit column, campum, coeui
 Ingressum!"

THE FABLE OF DRYOPE.

FROM THE NINTH BOOK OF

OVID'S METAMORPHOSES.

THE FABLE OF DRYOPUS.

FROM THE NINTH BOOK OF

OVID'S METAMORPHOSES.

ABOUT this time it became fashionable among the wits at Button's, the mob of gentlemen that wrote with ease, to translate Ovid. Their united performances were published in form by Garth, with a preface written in a flowing and lively style, but full of strange opinions. He declares that none of the classic poets had the talent of expressing himself with more force and perspicuity than Ovid; that the Fiat of the Hebrew Lawgiver is not more sublime than the jussit et extendi campos of the Latin Poet; that he excels in the propriety of his similes and epithets, the perspicuity of his allegories, and the instructive excellence of his morals. Above all, he commends him for his unforced transitions, and for the ease with which he slides into some new circumstances, without any violation of the unity of the story; the texture, says he, is so artful, that it may be compared to the work of his own Arachne, where the shade dies so gradually, and the light revives so imperceptibly, that it is hard to tell where the one ceases and the other begins. But it is remarkable that Quintilian thought very differently on this subject of the transitions; and the admirers of Ovid would do well to consider his opinion: "Illa vero frigida et puerilis est in scholis affectatio, et hujus velut præstigix plausum petat." Garth was a most amiable and benevolent man: It was said of him, "that no physician knew his art more, nor his trade less." Pope told Mr. Richardson, that there was hardly an alteration, of the innumerable corrections that were made throughout every edition of the Dispensary, that was not for the better. The vivacity of his conversation, the elegance of his manners, and the sweetness of his temper, made Garth an universal favourite, both with Whigs and Tories when party-rage ran high.

The notes which Addison wrote on those parts of Ovid which he translated are full of good sense, candour, and instruction. Great is the change in passing from Statius to Ovid; from force to facility of style, from thoughts and images too much studied and unnatural, to such as are obvious, careless, and familiar.

Voltaire has treated Augustus with pointed, but just severity, for banishing Ovid to Pontus, and assigning for a reason his having written The Art of Love; a work even of decency compared with several parts of Horace, whom Augustus so much praised and patronized; and which contained not a line at all comparable to some of the gross obscenities of Augustus's own verses. Laying many circumstances together, he thinks the real cause of this banishment was, that Ovid had seen and detected Augustus in some very criminal amour, and, in short, been witness to an act of incest. Ovid himself says,

“ Cur aliquid vidi?”

And Minutianus Apuleius says, “ Pulsum quoque in exitium quod Augusti incestum vidisset.” Voltaire adds, “ That Ovid himself deserves almost equal reproaches for having so lavishly and nauseously flattered both that emperor and his successor Tiberius.”

THE FABLE OF DRYOPE.

SHE said, and for her lost Galanthis sighs,
 When the fair Consort of her son replies,
 Since you a servant's ravish'd form bemoan,
 And kindly sigh for sorrows not your own,
 Let me (if tears and grief permit) relate
 A nearer woe, a sister's stranger fate.

No nymph of all Oechalia could compare
 For beauteous form with Dryope the fair,
 Her tender mother's only hope and pride,
 (Myself the offspring of a second bride.)

This Nymph compress'd by him who rules the day,
 Whom Delphi and the Delian isle obey,
 Andraemon lov'd; and, bless'd in all those charms
 That pleas'd a God, succeeded to her arms.

A lake there was, with shelving banks around,
 Whose verdant summit fragrant myrtles crown'd.
 These shades, unknowing of the fates, she sought,
 And to the Naiads flow'ry garlands brought;
 Her smiling babe (a pleasing charge) she prest
 Within her arms, and nourish'd at her breast.

Not distant far a watry Lotos grows,
 The spring was new, and all the verdant boughs
 Adorn'd with blossoms promis'd fruits that vie
 In glowing colours with the Tyrian dye :
 Of these she crop'd to please her infant son, 25
 And I myself the same rash act had done :
 But lo! I saw, (as near her side I stood,)
 The violated blossoms drop with blood ;
 Upon the tree I cast a frightful look ;
 The trembling tree with sudden horror shook. 30
 Lotis the nymph (if rural tales be true)
 As from Priapus' lawless lust she flew,
 Forsook her form ; and fixing here became
 A flow'ry plant, which still preserves her name.
 This change unknown, astonish'd at the sight, 35
 My trembling sister strove to urge her flight :
 And first the pardon of the nymphs implor'd
 And those offended sylvan pow'rs ador'd :
 But when she backward would have fled, she found
 Her stiff'ning feet were rooted in the ground : 40
 In vain to free her fasten'd feet she strove,
 And, as she struggles, only moves above ;
 She feels th' encroaching bark around her grow
 By quick degrees, and cover all below :
 Surpriz'd at this, her trembling hand she heaves 45
 To rend her hair ; her hand is fill'd with leaves :
 Where late was hair the shooting leaves are seen
 To rise, and shade her with a sudden green.

VER. 69. If to the wretched] This translation is faulty. To clear herself from the imputation of falling under this judgment of heaven, by any crime of her's, she bears witness to the behaviour of her husband and father, equally at least with her own; but why that introduction, "Si qua fides," believe me? And by what figure

The child Amphissus, to her bosom prest,
 Perceiv'd a colder and a harder breast,
 And found the springs, that ne'er 'till then deny'd
 Their milky moisture, on a sudden dry'd.
 I saw, unhappy! what I now relate,
 And stood the helpless witness of thy fate,
 Embrac'd thy boughs, thy rising bark delay'd,
 There wish'd to grow, and mingle shade with shade.

Behold Andraemon and th' unhappy fire
 Appear, and for their Dryope enquire:
 A springing tree for Dryope they find,
 And print warm kisses on the panting rind. 60
 Prostrate, with tears their kindred plant bedew,
 And close embrace as to the roots they grew.
 The face was all that now remain'd of thee,
 No more a woman, nor yet quite a tree;
 Thy branches hung with humid pearls appear, 65
 From ev'ry leaf distills a trickling tear,
 And strait a voice, while yet a voice remains,
 Thus through the trembling boughs in sighs complains.

figure is mutual innocence put for mutual harmony? Nothing is more common in verse than to use the first plural for the singular: "Patior sine crimine, & viximus innocuae," is but one and the same person; a testimony of her own innocence, but not of the mutual concord between her relations.

No wilful crime this heavy vengeance bred ;
 In mutual innocence our lives we led :
 If this be false, let these new greens decay,
 Let founding axes lop my limbs away,
 And crackling flames on all my honours prey. 75
 But from my branching arms this infant bear,
 Let some kind nurse supply a mother's care :
 And to his mother let him oft be led,
 Sport in her shades, and in her shades be fed ;
 Teach him, when first his infant voice shall frame
 Imperfect words, and lip his mother's name, 81
 To hail this tree, and say with weeping eyes,
 Within this plant my hapless parent lies ;
 And when in youth he seeks the shady woods,
 Oh let him fly the crystal lakes and floods, 85
 Nor touch the fatal flow'rs ; but, warn'd by me,
 Believe a goddess shrin'd in ev'ry tree.
 My fire, my sister, and my spouse, farewell !
 If in your breasts or love or pity dwell,
 Protect your plant, nor let my branches feel 90
 The browsing cattle or the piercing steel.
 Farewell ! and since I cannot bend to join
 My lips to yours, advance at least to mine.

 While yet thy mother has a kifs to give. 95

Remove your hands, the bark shall soon suffice
Without their aid to seal these dying eyes.

She ceas'd at once to speak, and ceas'd to be; 100
And all the nymph was lost within the tree;
Yet latent life through her new branches reign'd,
And long the plant a human heat retain'd.

ALTHOUGH I regret the hours our poet spent in translating Statius and Ovid; yet it has given us an opportunity of admiring his good sense and judgment, in not suffering his taste and style, in his succeeding works, to be infected with the faults of these two writers.

OVID'S METAMORPHOSES.

Remove your hands, the part shall flourish
 Without their aid to feel their being
 She can't at once to speak, and cease to be
 And all the nymph was left within the tree;
 Yet latent life through her new branches reign'd,
 And long the plant a human heart retain'd.

THOUGH I regret the loss of part in creating Staton and Ovid; yet it has given us an opportunity of admiring his good sense and judgment, in not imitating his tale and style, in his necessary works, to be infected with the faults of these two writers.

VERTUMINUS AND POMONA:

FROM THE FORTY-SEVENTH BOOK OF

OVID'S METAMORPHOSES.

OF all the paradoxes which the restless vigour of his mind stimulated Warburton to maintain, the following is one of the most striking and unaccountable: "There is not," he says, (Divine Legation, b. iii. p. 337.) "a more extraordinary book than the Metamorphoses of Ovid, whether we regard the matter or the form. The tales appear monstrously extravagant, and the composition irregular and wild. Had it been the product of a dark age and a barbarous writer, we should have been content to have ranked it in the class of our modern Oriental fables, as a matter of no consequence: but when we consider it was wrote when Rome was in its meridian of politeness and knowledge, and by an author who, as appears from his acquaintance with the Greek tragic writers, knew well what belonged to a work or composition, we cannot but be shocked at the grotesque assemblage of its parts. One would rather distrust one's judgement, and conclude the deformity to be only in appearance, which perhaps, on examination, we shall find to be the case; though it must be owned, the common opinion seems to be supported by Quintilian, the most judicious critic of antiquity, who speaks of our author and his work in these words: "Ut Ovidius lascivire in Metamorphosi solet, quem tamen excusare necessitas potest, res diversissimas in speciem unius corporis colligentem." And again, p. 343.: "Ovid gathered his materials from the mythological writers, and formed them into a poem on the most grand and regular plan, a popular history of Providence, carried down from the creation to his own times, through the Ægyptian, Phœnician, Greek, and Roman histories; and this in as methodical a manner as the graces of poetry would allow."—It was reserved therefore for Dr. Warburton to discover what none of the ancients, not even the penetrating and judicious Quintilian, who lived so much nearer the time of the author, could possibly perceive, the deep meaning, and the accurate method, of the Metamorphoses of Ovid. As Boileau said of some of the forced interpretations of Dacier in his Horace, that they were the Revelations of Dacier, it will not be uncandid or unjust to say, that this remark on Ovid is one of Warburton's Revelations. It is remarkable that the great Barrow preferred Ovid to Virgil, as Corneille did Lucan.

VERTUMNUS ET POMONA.

REGE sub hoc Pomona fuit: qua nulla Latinas
 Inter Hamadryadas coluit solertius hortos,
 Nec fuit arborei studiosior altera foetûs :
 Unde tenet nomen. non sylvas illa, nec amnes ; 5
 Rus amat, et ramos felicia poma ferentes.
 Nec jaculo gravis est, sed adunca dextera falce: 10
 Qua modo luxuriam premit, et spatiantia passim
 Brachia compescit ; fissa modo cortice virgam
 Inferit ; et succos alieno praeostat alumno.
 Nec patitur sentire fitim : bibulaeque recurvas 15
 Radicis fibras labentibus irrigat undis.
 Hic amor, hoc studium : Veneris quoque nulla cupido,
 Vim tamen agrestium metuens, pomaria claudit
 Intus, et accessus prohibet refugitque viriles. 20
 Quid non et Satyri, saltatibus apta juvenus,

VERTUMNUS AND POMONA.

THE fair Pomona flourish'd in his reign;
 Of all the Virgins of the sylvan train,
 None taught the trees a nobler race to bear,
 Or more improv'd the vegetable care.
 To her the shady grove, the flow'ry field, 5
 The streams and fountains no delights could yield;
 'Twas all her joy the rip'ning fruits to tend,
 And see the boughs with happy burthens bend.
 The hook she bore instead of Cynthia's spear,
 To lop the growth of the luxuriant year, 10
 To decent form the lawless shoots to bring,
 And teach th' obedient branches where to spring.
 Now the cleft rind inserted graffs receives,
 And yields an offspring more than nature gives;
 Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew, 15
 And feed their fibres with reviving dew.

These cares alone her virgin breast employ,
 Averse from Venus and the nuptial joy.
 Her private orchards, wall'd on ev'ry side,
 To lawless sylvans all access deny'd. 20
 How oft the Satyrs and the wanton Fawns,
 Who haunt the forests, or frequent the lawns,

Fecere, et pinu praecincti cornua Panes,
 Sylvanusque suis semper juvenilior annis,
 Quique Deus fures, vel falce, vel inguine terret,
 Ut poterentur ea? sed enim superabat amando 25
 Hos quoque Vertumnus: neque erat felicior illis.

O quoties habitu duri messoris aristas
 Corbe tulit, verique fuit messoris imago!
 Tempora saepe gerens foeno religata recenti,
 Defectum poterat gramen versasse videri.
 Saepe manu stimulos rigida portabat; ut illum 35
 Jurares fessos modo disjunxisse juvencos.

Falce data frondator erat, vitisque putator.
 Induerat scalas, lecturum poma putares:
 Miles erat gladio, piscator arundine sumta.
 Denique per multas aditum sibi saepe figuras
 Repperit, ut caperet spectatae gaudia formae.
 Ille etiam picta redimitus tempora mitra, 45

Innitens baculo, positus ad tempora canis,
 Adsimulavit anum: cultosque intravit in hortos;
 Pomaque mirata est: Tantoque potentior, inquit.

Paucaque

The God whose enſign ſcares the birds of prey,
 And old Silenus, youthful in decay,
 Employ'd their wiles, and unavailing care, 25
 To paſs the fences, and ſurprize the fair?
 Like theſe, Vertumnus own'd his faithful flame,
 Like theſe, rejected by the ſcornful dame.
 To gain her ſight a thouſand forms he wears;
 And firſt a reaper from the field appears. 30
 Sweating he walks, while loads of golden grain
 O'ercharge the ſhoulders of the ſeeming ſwain.
 Oft o'er his back a crooked ſcythe is laid,
 And wreaths of hay his ſun-burnt temples ſhade:
 Oft in his harden'd hand a goad he bears, 35
 Like one who late unyok'd the ſweating ſteers.
 Sometimes his pruning-hook corrects the vines,
 And the looſe ſtragglers to their ranks confines.
 Now gath'ring what the bounteous year allows,
 He pulls ripe apples from the bending boughs. 40
 A ſoldier now, he with his ſword appears;
 A fiſher next, his trembling angle bears;
 Each ſhape he varies, and each art he tries,
 On her bright charms to feaſt his longing eyes.
 A female form at laſt Vertumnus wears, 45
 With all the marks of rev'rend age appears,
 His temples thinly ſpread with ſilver hairs;
 Prop'd on his ſtaff, and ſtooping as he goes,
 A painted mitre ſhades his furrow'd brows.

Paucaque laudatae dedit oscula ; qualia nunquam
 Vera dedisset anus : glebaque incurva refedit,
 Suspiciens pandos autumnii pondere ramos.

Ulmus erat contra, spatiosa tumentibus uvis: 60

Quam socia postquam pariter cum vite probavit ;

At si staret, ait, coelebs, sine palmite truncus,

The god in this decrepit form array'd, 50
 The gardens enter'd, and the fruit survey'd;
 And "Happy you! (he thus address'd the maid)
 " Whose charms as far all other nymphs outshine,
 " As other gardens are excell'd by thine!"
 Then kiss'd the fair; (his kisses warmer grow 55
 Than such as women on their sex bestow.)
 Then plac'd beside her on the flow'ry ground,
 Beheld the trees with autumn's bounty crown'd.
 An Elm was near, to whose embraces led,
 The curling Vine her swelling clusters spread: 60
 He view'd her twining branches with delight,
 And prais'd the beauty of the pleasing sight.

Yet this tall elm, but for his vine (he said)
 Had stood neglected, and a barren shade;
 And this fair vine, but that her arms surround 65
 Her marry'd elm, had crept along the ground.
 Ah! beauteous maid, let this example move
 Your mind, averse from all the joys of love.
 Deign to be lov'd, and ev'ry heart subdue! 69
 What nymph could e'er attract such crowds as you?
 Not she whose beauty urg'd the Centaur's arms,
 Ulysses' Queen, nor Helen's fatal charms.
 Ev'n now, when silent Scorn is all thy gain,
 A thousand court you, tho' they court in vain,
 A thousand sylvans, demigods, and gods, 75
 That haunt our mountains and our Alban woods.
 But if you'll prosper, mark what I advise,
 Whom age and long experience render wise,

And one whose tender care is far above
 All that these lovers ever felt of love, 80
 (Far more than e'er can by yourself be guest)
 Fix on Vertumnus, and reject the rest.
 For his firm faith I dare engage my own ;
 Scarce to himself, himself is better known.
 To distant lands Vertumnus never roves ; 85
 Like you, contented with his native groves ;
 Nor at first sight, like most, admires the fair ;
 For you he lives ; and you alone shall share
 His last affection, as his early care.
 Besides, he's lovely far above the rest, 90
 With youth immortal, and with beauty blest.
 Add, that he varies ev'ry shape with ease,
 And tries all forms that may Pomona please,
 But what should most excite a mutual flame,
 Your rural cares and pleasures are the same : 95
 To him your orchards early fruits are due,
 (A pleasing off'ring when 'tis made by you)
 He values these ; but yet (alas) complains,
 That still the best and dearest gift remains.
 Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows 100
 With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows ;
 Nor tasteful herbs that in these gardens rise,
 Which the kind soil with milky sap supplies ;
 You, only you, can move the God's desire :
 Oh crown so constant and so pure a fire! 105
 Let soft compassion touch your gentle mind ;
 Think, 'tis Vertumnus begs you to be kind!

Qui petit, ore meo praesentem crede precari—
 Sic tibi nec verum nascentia frigus adurat
 Poma ; nec excutiant rapidi florentia venti. 110

Haec ubi nequicquam formas Deus aptus in omnes,
 Edidit ; in juvenem rediit : et anilia demit

Instrumenta sibi : talisque adparuit illi,
 Qualis ubi oppositas nitidissima folis imago 115

Evicit nubes, nullaque obstante reluxit.
 Vimque parat: sed vi non est opus ; inque figura
 Capta Dei Nympha est, et mutua vulnera sentit.

So may no frost, when early buds appear,
 Destroy the promise of the youthful year; 109
 Nor winds, when first your florid orchard blows,
 Shake the light blossoms from their blasted boughs!

This when the various God had urg'd in vain,
 He straight assum'd his native form again;
 Such, and so bright an aspect now he bears, 114
 As when through clouds th' emerging sun appears,
 And thence exerting his refulgent ray,
 Dispels the darkness, and reveals the day.
 Force he prepar'd, but check'd the rash design;
 For when, appearing in a form divine, 119
 The Nymph surveys him, and beholds the grace
 Of charming features, and a youthful face!
 In her soft breast consenting passions move,
 And the warm maid confess'd a mutual love.

IT is not a little mortifying to read the following strange words in one of Dryden's prefaces; but we know how often he changed his critical opinions: "Though Virgil describes his Dido well and naturally, yet he must yield in that to the Myrrha, the Biblis, the Althæa of Ovid; for, as great an admirer of him as I am, I must acknowledge that, if I see not more of their souls than I see of Dido's, at least I have a greater concernment for them; and that convinces me that Ovid has touched those tender strokes more delicately than Virgil could!" Settle never advanced so absurd an opinion!

So may no frost, when early buds appear,
 Destroy the promise of the youthful year;
 Nor winds, when with your fertile orchard blow,
 Shake the light blossoms from their plucked bow.
 This when the various God had ord'rd in vain,
 He first shinn'd his native form again
 Seen, and to brighten an aspect now he bears
 As when through clouds his emerging sun appears,
 And thence, striking his resplendent rays,
 Dips the dark clouds, and reveals the day.
 Forc'd he prepar'd, but check'd the vain design;
 For when, appearing in a form divine,
 The Nymph surveys him, and beholds the grace
 Of charming features, and a youthful face!
 In her soft breast consenting passions move,
 And the warm maid consents a mutual love.

WRITTEN BY THE AUTHOR IN HIS YOUTH.

It is not a little mortifying to read the following strange words in one of Dryden's papers; but we know how often he changed his critical opinions: "Though Virgil described his Idios well and naturally, yet he hath said in that to the Myths, the Fables, the Stories of Gods; for as great an admirer of him as I am, I can acknowledge that, if I see not more of their faults than I see of their virtues, I have a greater respect for them; and that is the reason why I have not touch'd their poetical errors more than I have. Virgil's Idios, I think, were admirably well written."

AT the suggestion of the ingenious Dr. John Hoadly, Mr. Hawkins Brown wrote six little poems, entitled, A Pipe of Tobacco, in imitation of six late English poets, Cibber, Philips, Thomson, Young, Pope, Swift. The second was written by Dr. Hoadly himself. The two best of these imitations are that of Young and Pope, whose manner is exactly characterized. Mr. Hawkins Brown, by his admirable Latin Poem on the Immortality of the Soul, shewed he had a genius far above these pleasantries. Dr. Hoadly once shewed me a new Rehearsal, being a comedy written by himself and his brother, the Author of the Suspicious Husband, to ridicule several modern tragedies. I remember they were particularly severe on the Saguntum of Frowde and the Sophonisba of Thomson.

At the suggestion of the ingenious Dr. John Hunter, Mr. Hawkins Brown wrote six little poems, entitled, A Epic of Tobacco, in imitation of his late brother's poem, Cibber, Philip Thomas, Young, Pope, Swift. The second was written by Dr. Hooby himself. The two sets of these imitations are that of Young and Pope, whose manner is exactly distinguished. Mr. Hawkins Brown, by his admirable Latin Poem on the Immortality of the Soul, showed he had a peculiar sense of the pleasure of the good, which ever showed us a new Richard being a comedy written by himself and his brother, the author of the Sublimity of the Husband, to which several wooden speeches. I remember that were particularly severe on the Regent of France and the Sophists of London.

S P E N S E R.

HE that was unacquainted with Spenser, and was to form his ideas of the turn and manner of his genius from this piece, would undoubtedly suppose that he abounded in filthy images, and excelled in describing the lower scenes of life. But the characteristics of this sweet and allegorical poet are not only strong and circumstantial imagery, but tender and pathetic feeling, a most melodious flow of versification, and a certain pleasing melancholy in his sentiments, the constant companion of an elegant taste, that casts a delicacy and grace over all his compositions. To imitate Spenser on a subject that does not partake of the pathos, is not giving a true representation of him; for he seems to be more awake and alive to all the softnesses of nature than almost any writer I can recollect. There is an assemblage of disgusting and disagreeable sounds in the following stanza of Pope, which one is almost tempted to think, if it were possible, had been contrived as a contrast, or rather as a burlesque, of a most exquisite stanza in the Fairy Queen :

“ The snappish cur (the passengers annoy)
Close at my heel with yelping treble flies;
The whimp’ring girl, and hoarser-screaming boy,
Join to the yelping treble shrilling cries;
The scolding Queen to louder notes doth rise,
And her full pipes those shrilling cries confound;
To her full pipes the grunting hog replies;
The grunting hogs alarm the neighbours round,
And curs, girls, boys, in the deep bafe are drown’d.”

The very turn of these numbers bears the closest resemblance with the following, which are of themselves a complete concert of the most delicious music :

“ The joyous birds shrouded in cheerful shade,
Their notes unto the voice attempted sweet;

Th' angelical, soft trembling voices made
 To th' instruments divine resondance meet;
 The silver-sounding instruments did meet
 With the base murmure of the water's fall;
 The waters fall with difference discreet,
 Now soft, now loud unto the wind did call,
 The gentle warbling wind low answered to all."

Book ii. cant. 12. f. 71.

These images, one would have thought, were peculiarly calculated to have struck the fancy of our young imitator with so much admiration, as not to have suffered him to make a kind of travesty of them.

The next stanza of Pope represents some allegorical figures, of which his original was so fond:

"Hard by a sty, beneath a roof of thatch,
 Dwelt Obloquy, who in her early days
 Baskets of fish at Billingsgate did watch,
 Cod, whiting, oyster, mackrel, sprat, or plaice;
 There learn'd she speech from tongues that never cease,
 Slander beside her, like a Magpie, chatters,
 With Envy, (spitting Cat) dread foe to peace;
 Like a curs'd Cur, Malice before her clatters
 And vexing ev'ry wight, tears cloaths and all to tatters."

But these personages of Obloquy, Slander, Envy, and Malice, are not marked with any distinct attributes; they are not those living figures, whose attitudes and behaviour Spenser has minutely drawn with so much clearness and truth, that we behold them with our eyes as plainly as we do on the ceiling of the banquetting-house. For, in truth, the pencil of Spenser is as powerful as that of Rubens, his brother allegorist; which two artists resembled each other in many respects; but Spenser had more grace, and was as warm a colourist.

 A narrow Pass there is, with Houses low;
 Where ever and anon, the Stream is ey'd,
 And many a Boat soft sliding to and fro.
 There oft are heard the notes of Infant Woe, 5
 The short thick Sob, loud Scream, and shriller Squall:
 How can ye, Mothers, vex your Children so?
 Some play, some eat, some cack against the wall,
 And as they crouchen low, for bread and butter call.

W A L L E R.

POPE has imitated Waller with elegance, especially in the verses on a Fan of his own design; for he designed with dexterity and taste.

The application of the story of Cephalus and Procris is as ingenious as Waller's Phœbus and Daphne. Waller abounds, perhaps to excess, in allusions to mythology and the ancient classics. The French, as may be imagined, complain that he is too learned for the ladies. The following twelve lines contain three allusions, delicate indeed; but some may deem them to be too far-fetched, too much crowded, and not obvious to the lady to whom they were addressed, on her singing a song of his composing:

“ Chloris, yourself you so excell,
 When you vouchsafe to breathe my thought,
 That like a spirit with this spell
 Of my own teaching I am caught.
 That eagle's fate and mine are one,
 Which on the shaft that made him die,
 Espy'd a feather of his own
 Wherewith he went to soar so high.
 Had Echo with so sweet a grace
 Narcissus' loud complaints return'd,
 Not for reflection of his face,
 But of his voice, the boy had burn'd.”

Here is matter enough compressed together for Voiture to have spun out into fifty lines. If I was to name my favourite among Waller's smaller pieces, it should be his Apology for having loved before. He begins by saying, “ That they who never had been used to the surprising juice of the grape, render up their reason to
 the

the first delicious cup." This is sufficiently gallant ; but what he adds has much of the sublime, and is like a thought of Milton's :

“ To man that was i' th' evening made,
 Stars gave the first delight ;
 Admiring in the gloomy shade
 Those little drops of light.
 Then at Aurora, whose fair hand
 Remov'd them from the skies,
 He gazing tow'rds the East did stand,
 She entertain'd his eyes.
 But when the bright Sun did appear,
 All those he 'gan despise ;
 His wonder was determin'd there,
 And could no higher rise.”

Which of the French writers has produced any thing at once so gallant and so lofty ?

The English versification was much smoothed by Waller ; who used to own, that he derived the harmony of his numbers from Fairfax's Tasso, who well-vowelled his lines, though Sandys was a melodious versifier, and Spenser has perhaps more variety of music than either of them. A poet who addresses his pieces to living characters, and confines himself to the subjects and anecdotes of his own times, like this courtly author, bids fairer to become popular, than he that is employed in higher scenes of poetry and fiction, which are more remote from common manners. It may be remarked lastly of Waller, that there is no passion in his love-verses ; and that one elegy of Tibullus, so well imitated by Hammond, and so unjustly censured by Johnson, excels a volume of the most refined panegyric. It is remarkable that Waller never mentions Milton, whose Comus, and smaller poems, preceded his own ; but were unsuitable to the French taste, on which Waller was formed.

ON A LADY SINGING TO HER LUTE.

FAIR Charmer, cease, nor make your voice's prize
 A heart resign'd the conquest of your eyes :
 Well might, alas ! that threat'ned vessel fail,
 Which winds and light'ning both at once assail.
 We were too blest with these enchanting lays, 5
 Which must be heav'nly when an Angel plays :
 But killing charms your lover's death contrive,
 Lest heav'nly music should be heard alive.
 Orpheus could charm the trees : but thus a tree,
 Taught by your hand, can charm no less than he :
 A poet made the silent wood pursue, 11
 This vocal wood had drawn the Poet too.

On a FAN of the Author's design, in which was painted the story of CEPHALUS and PROCRIS, with the Motto, AURA VENI.

COME, gentle Air! th' Aeolian shepherd said,
 While Procris panted in the secret shade;
 Come, gentle Air! the fairer Delia cries,
 While at her feet her swain expiring lies.
 Lo the glad gales o'er all her beauties stray, 5
 Breathe on her lips, and in her bosom play!
 In Delia's hand this toy is fatal found,
 Nor could that fabled dart more surely wound:
 Both gifts destructive to the givers prove;
 Alike both lovers fall by those they love. 10
 Yet guiltless too this bright destroyer lives,
 At random wounds, nor knows the wound she gives:
 She views the story with attentive eyes,
 And pities Procris, while her lover dies.

IN the following love-verses is a strain of sensibility which the reader will be pleased, I suppose, to see, being now first published from a manuscript of Mr. Gray:

“ With beauty, with pleasure, surrounded, to languish,
 To weep without knowing the cause of my anguish;
 To start from short slumbers, and wish for the morning,
 To close my dull eyes when I see it returning;
 Sighs sudden and frequent, looks ever dejected,
 Words that steal from my tongue by no meaning connected;
 Ah say, fellow swains, how these symptoms befell me?
 They smile, but reply not; sure Delia will tell me.”

C O W L E Y.

IN the imitation of Cowley, in two pieces, on a Garden, and on Weeping, Pope has properly enough, in conformity to his original, extorted some moral, or darted forth some witticism on every object he mentions. It is not enough to say, that the laurels sheltered the fountain from the heat of the day; but this idea must be accompanied with a conceit:

“ — Daphne, now a tree, as once a maid,
Still from Apollo vindicates her shade.”

The flowers that grow on the water-side could not be sufficiently described without saying, that

“ The pale Narcissus on the bank, in vain
Transformed, gazes on himself again.”

In the lines on a Lady Weeping, you might expect a touching picture of beauty in distress; you will be disappointed. Wit, on the present occasion, is to be preferred to tenderness; the babe in her eye is said to resemble Phaeton so much,

“ That heav'n the threat'ned world to spare,
Thought fit to drown him in her tears;
Else might th' ambitious nymph aspire
To set, like him, the world on fire.”

Let not this strained affectation of striving to be witty upon all occasions be thought exaggerated, or a caricature of Cowley. It is painful to censure a writer of so amiable a mind, such integrity of manners, and such a sweetness of temper. His fancy was brilliant, strong, and sprightly; but his taste false and unclassical, even though he had much learning. In his Latin compositions, his six books on plants, where the subject might have led him to a contrary practice, he imitates Martial rather than Virgil, and has given us more epigrams than descriptions. I do not remember to have have seen it enough observed, that Cowley had a most happy talent of imitating the easy manner of Horace's epistolary writings; I must therefore insert a specimen of this his excellence :

“ Ergo iterum versus? dices. O Vane! quid ergo
 Morbum ejurasti toties, tibi qui infidet altis,
 Non evellendus, vi vel ratione, medullis?
 Numne poetarum (merito dices) ut amantum
 Derisum ridere deum perjuria censes?
 Parcius hæc, fodes, neve inclementibus urge
 Infelicem hominem dicis; nam fata trahunt me
 Magna reluctantem, et nequicquam in vincla minacem.
 Helleborum sumpsi, fateor, pulchreque videbar
 Purgatus morbi; sed Luna potentior herbis
 Infanire iterum jubet, et sibi vendicat ægrum.”

There is another epistle also, well worthy perusal, to his friend, Mat. Clifford, at the end of the same volume. Pope, in one of his imitations of Horace, has exhibited the real character of Cowley with delicacy and candour :

“ Who now reads Cowley? If he pleases yet,
 His moral pleases, not his pointed wit;
 Forgot his epic, nay Pindaric art,
 But still I love the language of his heart.”

His prose works give us the most amiable idea both of his abilities and his heart. His Pindaric odes cannot be perused with common patience by a lover of antiquity. He that would see Pindar's manner truly imitated, may read Masters's noble and pathetic Ode on the Crucifixion; and he that wants to be convinced that these reflections on Cowley are not too severe, may read also his epigrammatic version of it :

“ Η εκ θρακας ὀλοπομφυρον
 Στιλβοντ' ε φλογι
 Σιδουης αλος, αλ
 — λ αιματι σαζομενω — ”

“ Dost thou not see thy prince in purple clad all o'er,
 Not purple brought from the Sidonian shore;
 But made at home with richer gore?”

“ Αισιγ' ανοιγε
 Πυλας σπαπαι
 Και πηγας βλεφαρων
 Λυσαι, ψικαζ', δευ γαιαι.”

“ Open, oh! open wide the fountains of thine eyes,
And let them call

Their flock of moisture forth where e'er it lies,

For this will ask it all.

'Twould all, alas! too little be,

Though thy salt tears came from a sea.”

Cowley being early disgusted with the perplexities and vanities of a court life, had a strong desire to enjoy the milder pleasures of solitude and retirement; he therefore escaped from the tumults of London to a little house at Wandsworth; but finding that place too near the metropolis, he left it for Richmond, and at last settled at Chertsey. He seems to have thought that the swains of Surry had the innocence of those of Sydney's Arcadia; but the perverseness and debauchery of his own workmen soon undeceived him, with whom, it is said, he was sometimes so provoked, as even to be betrayed into an oath. His income was about three hundred pounds a year. Towards the latter part of his life he shewed an aversion to the company of women, and would often leave the room if any happened to enter it whilst he was present, but still retained a sincere affection for Leonora. His death was occasioned by a singular accident; he paid a visit on foot with his friend Sprat to a gentleman in the neighbourhood of Chertsey, which they prolonged, and feasted too much, till midnight. On their return home they mistook their way, and were obliged to pass the whole night exposed under a hedge, where Cowley caught a severe cold, attended with a fever, that terminated in his death. All these particulars were communicated to me by Mr. Spence from his Anecdotes, who assured me he received them from Mr. Pope's own mouth.

THE GARDEN.

FAIN would my Muse the flow'ry Treasures sing,
 And humble glories of the youthful Spring ;
 Where op'ning Roses breathing sweets diffuse,
 And soft Carnations show'r their balmy dews ;
 Where Lilies smile in virgin robes of white, 5
 The thin Undress of superficial Light,
 And vary'd Tulips show so dazzling gay,
 Blushing in bright diversities of day,
 Each painted flowret in the lake below
 Surveys its beauties, whence its beauties grow ; 10
 And pale Narcissus on the bank, in vain
 Transformed, gazes on himself again.
 Here aged trees Cathedral Walks compose,
 And mount the Hill in venerable rows :
 There the green Infants in their beds are laid, 15
 The Garden's Hope, and its expected shade.
 Here Orange-trees with blooms and pendants shine,
 And vernal honours to their autumn join ;
 Exceed their promise in the ripen'd store,
 Yet in the rising blossom promise more. 20
 There in bright drops the crystal Fountains play ;
 By Laurels shielded from the piercing day :

Where Daphne, now a tree as once a maid,
 Still from Apollo vindicates her shade,
 Still turns her beauties from the invading beam, 25
 Nor seeks in vain for succour to the Stream.
 The stream at once preserves her virgin leaves,
 At once a shelter from her boughs receives,
 Where Summer's beauty midst of Winter stays,
 And Winter's Coolness spite of Summer's rays, 30

WHILE Celia's Tears make sorrow bright,
 Proud Grief fits swelling in her eyes;
 The Sun, next those the fairest light,
 Thus from the Ocean first did rise :
 And thus through Mists we see the sun, 5
 Which else we durst not gaze upon.
 These silver drops, like morning dew,
 Foretell the fervour of the day :
 So from one Cloud soft show'rs we view,
 And blasting lightnings burst away. 10
 The Stars that fall from Celia's eye,
 Declare our Doom in drawing nigh.
 The Baby in that funny Sphere
 So like a Phaëton appears,
 That Heav'n, the threaten'd World to spare, 15
 Thought fit to drown him in her tears:
 Else might th' ambitious Nymph aspire,
 To set, like him, Heav'n too on fire.

E. OF ROCHESTER.

THE verses on Silence are a sensible imitation of the Earl of Rochester's on Nothing; which piece, together with his Satire on Man from the fourth of Boileau, and the tenth Satire of Horace, (which in truth is excellent), are the only pieces of this profligate nobleman which modesty or common sense will allow any man to read. Rochester had much energy in his thoughts and diction; and though the ancient Satirists often use great liberty in their expressions, yet, as the ingenious historian * observes, "Their freedom no more resembles the licence of Rochester than the nakedness of an Indian does that of a common prostitute."

Pope, in this imitation, has discovered a fund of solid sense, and just observation upon vice and folly, that are very remarkable in a person so extremely young as he was at the time of composing it. I believe, on a fair comparison with Rochester's lines, it will be found, that although the turn of the Satire be copied, yet it is excelled. That Rochester should write a Satire on Man I am not surprized; it is the business of the libertine to degrade his species, and debase the dignity of human nature, and thereby destroy the most efficacious incitements to lovely and laudable actions. But that a writer of Boileau's purity of manners should represent his kind in the dark and disagreeable colours he has done, with all the malignity of a discontented Hobbit, is a lamentable perversion of fine talents, and is a real injury to society. It is a fact worthy the attention of those who study the history of learning, that the gross licentiousness and applauded debauchery of Charles the Second's court proved almost as pernicious to the progress of polite literature and the fine arts, that began to revive after the Grand Rebellion, as the gloomy superstition, the absurd cant, and formal hypocrisy, that disgraced this nation during the usurpation of Cromwell.

E. OF ROCHESTER.

ON SILENCE.

I.

SILENCE! coeval with Eternity ;
 Thou wert, ere Nature's self began to be,
 'Twas one vast Nothing, all, and all slept fast in thee.

II.

Thine was the sway, ere heav'n was form'd, or earth,
 Ere fruitful Thought conceiv'd creation's birth,
 Or midwife Word gave aid, and spoke the infant forth.

III.

Then various elements, against thee join'd,
 In one more various animal combin'd,
 And fram'd the clam'rous race of busy Human-kind.

IV.

The tongue mov'd gently first, and speech was low,
 Till wrangling Science taught it noise and show,
 And wicked Wit arose, thy most abusive foe.

V.

But rebel Wit deserts thee oft' in vain :
 Lost in the maze of words he turns again,
 And seeks a furer state, and courts thy gentle reign.

VI.

Afflicted Sense thou kindly dost set free,
 Oppress'd with argumental tyranny,
 And routed Reason finds a safe retreat in thee.

VII.

With thee in private modest Dulness lies,
 And in thy bosom lurks in Thought's disguise ;
 Thou varnisher of Fools, and cheat of all the Wise!

VIII.

Yet thy indulgence is by both confest ;
 Folly by thee lies sleeping in the breast,
 And 'tis in thee at last that Wisdom seeks for rest.

IX.

Silence the knave's repute, the whore's good name,
 The only honour of the wishing dame ;
 The very want of tongue makes thee a kind of Fame.

X.

But could'st thou seize some tongues that now are free,
 How Church and State should be oblig'd to thee ?
 At Senate, and at Bar, how welcome would'st thou be ?

XI.

XI.

Yet speech ev'n there, submissively withdraws,
 From rights of subjects, and the poor man's cause:
 Then pompous Silence reigns, and stills the noisy Laws.

XII.

Past services of friends, good deeds of foes,
 What Fav'rites gain, and what the Nation owes,
 Fly the forgetful world, and in thy arms repose.

XIII.

The country wit, religion of the town,
 The courtier's learning, policy o' th' gown,
 Are best by thee exprefs'd ; and shine in thee alone.

XIV.

The parson's cant, the lawyer's sophistry,
 Lord's quibble, critic's jest ; all end in thee
 All rest in peace at last, and sleep eternally.

E. OF DORSET.

“IF one turns to the authors of the last age for the character of this Lord, one meets with nothing but encomiums on his wit and good-nature. He was the finest gentleman in the voluptuous court of Charles the Second, and in the gloomy one of King William. He had as much wit as his first master, or his cotemporaries, Buckingham and Rochester; without the royal want of feeling, the Duke’s want of principles, or the Earl’s want of thought. The latter said, with astonishment, “That he did not know how it was, but Lord Dorset might do any thing, and yet was never to blame!” It was not that he was free from the failings of humanity, but he had the tenderness of it too, which made every body excuse whom every body loved; for even the asperity of his verses seems to have been forgiven to

“The best-good man, with the worst-natured muse.”

“This line is not more familiar than Lord Dorset’s own poems to all who have a taste for the genteelst beauties of natural and easy verse, or than his Lordship’s own bon-mots, of which I cannot help repeating one of singular humour: Lord Craven was a proverb for officious whispers to men in power. On Lord Dorset’s promotion, King Charles having seen Lord Craven pay his usual tribute to him, asked the former what the latter had been saying? The Earl replied gravely, “Sir, my Lord Craven did me the honour to whisper, but I did not think it good manners to listen.” When he was dying, Congreve, who had been to visit him, being asked how he had left him, replied, “Faith, he slabbers more wit than other people have in their best health.”

“His Lordship and Waller are said to have assisted Mrs. Catherine Philips in her translation of Corneille’s Pompey.”

ARTEMISIA.

THO' Artemisia talks, by fits,
 Of councils, classics, fathers, wits;
 Reads Malbranche, Boyle, and Locke:
 Yet in some things methinks she fails,
 'Twere well if she would pare her nails,
 And wear a cleaner smock.

Haughty and huge as High-Dutch bride,
 Such nastiness, and so much pride,
 Are oddly join'd by fate:
 On her large squab you find her spread,
 Like a fat corpse upon a bed,
 That lies and stinks in state.

10

She wears no colours (sign of grace)
 On any part except her face;
 All white and black beside:
 Dauntless her look, her gesture proud,
 Her voice theatrically loud,
 And masculine her stride.

15

So

So have I seen, in black and white
 A prating thing, a Magpye hight, 20
 Majestically stalk ;
 A stately, worthless animal,
 That plies the tongue, and wags the tail,
 All flutter, pride, and talk.

LET the curious reader compare Fenton's Imitation of Dorset's manner with this of Pope:

I.
 " Olivia's lewd, but looks devout,
 And Scripture-proofs she throws about,
 When first you try to win her;
 But pull your fob of guineas out,
 Fee Jenny first, and never doubt
 To find the faint a sinner.

II.
 Baxter by day is her delight,
 No chocolate must come in sight
 Before two morning chapters ;
 But lest the spleen should spoil her quite,
 She takes a civil friend at night
 To raise her holy raptures.

III.
 Thus oft' we see a glow-worm gay,
 At large his fiery tail display,
 Encourag'd by the dark ;
 And yet the fullen thing all day
 Snug in the lonely thicket lay,
 And hid the native spark."

P H R Y N E.

PHRYNE had talents for mankind,
 Open she was, and unconfin'd,
 Like some free port of trade :
 Merchants unloaded here their freight,
 And Agents from each foreign state,
 Here first their entry made.
 Her learning and good-breeding such,
 Whether th' Italian or the Dutch,
 Spaniards or French came to her :
 To all obliging she'd appear : 10
 'Twas Si Signior, 'twas Yaw Mynbeer,
 'Twas S'il vous plaißt, Monsieur.
 Obscure by birth, renown'd by crimes,
 Still changing names, religions, climes,
 At length she turns a bride : 15
 In di'monds, pearls, and rich brocades,
 She shines the first of batter'd jades,
 And flutters in her pride.
 So have I known those Insects fair
 (Which curious Germans hold so rare) 20
 Still vary shapes and dyes ;
 Still gain new titles with new forms ;
 First grubs obscene, then wriggling worms,
 Then painted butterflies.

D R. S W I F T.

THE point of the likeness in this imitation consists in describing the objects as they really exist in life, like Hogarth's paintings, without heightening or enlarging them, by any imaginary circumstances. In this way of writing Swift excelled; witness his Description of a Morning in the City, of a City Shower, of the House of Baucis and Philemon, and the Verses on his own Death. In this also consists the chief beauty of Gay's Trivia; a subject Swift desired him to write upon, and for which he furnished him with many hints. The character of Swift has been scrutinized in so many late writings, particularly by Hawksworth and Sheridan, that it is superfluous to enter upon it. Voltaire affirms, "That the famous Tale of a Tub is an imitation of the old story of the three invisible rings, which a father bequeathed to his three children. These three rings were the Jewish, Christian, and Mahometan religions. It is, moreover, an imitation of the history of Mero and Enegu, by Fontenelle. Mero was the anagram of Rome, and Enegu of Geneva. These two sisters claimed the succession to the throne of their fathers. Mero reigned first. Fontenelle represents her as a sorceress, who could convey away bread, and perform acts of conjuration with dead bodies. This is precisely the Lord Peter of Swift, who presents a piece of bread to his two brothers, and says to them, 'This, my good friends, is excellent Burgundy; these partridges have an admirable flavour!' The same Lord Peter, in Swift, performs throughout the very part that Mero plays in Fontenelle. Thus all is imitation. The idea of the Persian Letters is taken from the Turkish Spy. Boiardo has imitated Pulci, Ariosto has imitated Boiardo. The geniuses, apparently most original, borrow from each other.

THE HAPPY LIFE OF A COUNTRY PARSON

“SWIFT,” says Hume, “has more humour than knowledge, more taste than judgement, and more spleen, prejudice, and passion, than any of those qualities.” Discourse v.

At the hazard of an imputation of partiality to the author, I venture to say, that I prefer a poem, called The Progress of Discontent, to any imitation of Swift, that ever has yet appeared. I shall just add, that the Baucis and Philemon of La Fontaine far excells that of Swift.

NOTES.

[Epistle to Robert Earl of Oxford.] This Epistle was sent to the Earl of Oxford with Dr. Parnelle's Poems published by our Author, after the said Earl's imprisonment in the Tower, and retreat into the country, in the Year 1721. P.

VER. 1. Such were the notes] The notes were charming indeed! We have few pieces of Poetry superior to Parnelle's Rise of Woman; the Fairy Tale; the Hymn to Contentment; Health, an Eclogue; the Vigil of Venus; the Night-piece on Death; the Allegory on Man; and the Hermit; of which Johnson speaks too contemptuously. The best account of the original of this last exquisite poem is given in the third volume of the History of English Poetry, p. 31.; from whence it appears that it was taken from the eightieth chapter of that curious repository of ancient tales, the Gesta Romanorum. The story is related in the fourth volume of Howel's Letters; who says he found it in Sir Philip Herbert's Conceptions; but this fine Apologue was much better related in the Divine Dialogues of Dr. Henry More, Dial. ii. part 1.; and Parnelle seems to have copied it chiefly from this Platonic Theologift, who had not less imagination than learning. Pope

Blest in each science, blest in ev'ry strain! 5
 Dear to the Muse! to HARLEY dear—in vain!

For him, thou oft hast bid the World attend,
 Fond to forget the Statesman in the Friend;
 For SWIFT and him, despis'd the farce of state,
 The sober follies of the wise and great; 10
 Dextrous, the craving, fawning crowd to quit,
 And pleas'd to 'scape from Flattery to Wit.

Absent or dead, still let a friend be dear,
 (A sigh the absent claims, the dead a tear)
 Recall those nights that clos'd thy toilsome days, 15
 Still hear thy Parnelle in his living lays,
 Who, careless now of Int'rest, Fame, or Fate,
 Perhaps forgets that OXFORD e'er was great;
 Or deeming meanest what we greatest call,
 Beholds thee glorious only in thy fall. 20

used to say that it was originally written in Spanish: from the early connection between the Spaniards and Arabians, it may be suspected that it was an Oriental tale. Voltaire has inserted it in his Zadig, without mentioning a syllable of the place whence he borrowed it.

VER. 21. And sure, if aught] Strength of mind appears to have been the predominant characteristic of Lord Oxford; of which he gave the most striking proofs when he was stabbed, displaced, imprisoned. These noble and nervous lines allude to these circumstances; of his fortitude and firmness another striking proof remains, in a letter which the Earl wrote from the Tower to a friend,

A foul supreme, in each hard instance try'd,
 Above all Pain, all Passion, and all Pride,
 The rage of Pow'r, the blast of public breath,
 The lust of Lucre, and the dread of Death.

In vain to Deserts thy retreat is made;
 The Muse attends thee to thy silent shade:
 'Tis her's, the brave man's latest steps to trace,
 Rejudge his acts, and dignify disgrace.

When Int'rest calls off all her sneaking train,
 And all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain;
 She waits, or to the scaffold, or the cell,
 When the last ling'ring friend has bid farewell.

friend, who advised him to meditate an escape, and which is worthy of the greatest hero of antiquity. This extraordinary letter I had the pleasure of reading, by the favour of the Earl's excellent grand-daughter, the late Dutchess Dowager of Portland, who inherited that love of literature and science, so peculiar to her ancestors and family.

I am well informed that Bolingbroke was greatly mortified at Pope's bestowing these praises on his old antagonist, whom he mortally hated; yet I have seen two original letters in the hands of the same Dutchess of Portland, of Lord Bolingbroke to Lord Oxford, full of the most fulsome flattery of the man whom he affected to despise, and of very idle and profane applications of Scripture.

The visions of Parnelle, at the end of his Poems, published in the Guardian, are in a rugged inharmonious style; as indeed is the Life of Zoilus, printed 1717; and also the Essay on the Life of Homer, prefixed to our Author's translation: and his Essay on the Different Styles in Poetry is rather a mean performance.

Epistle to Mr. Jervas] This Epistle and the two following were written some years before the rest, and originally printed in 1717. P.

Jervas owed much more of his reputation to this Epistle than to his skill as a painter. "He was defective," says Mr. Walpole, "in drawing, colouring, and composition; his pictures are a light, slimzy, kind of fan-painting, as large as the life; his vanity was excessive." The reason why Lady Bridgewater's name is so frequently repeated in this Epistle, is, because Jervas affected to be violently in love with her. As she was sitting to him one day, he ran over the beauties of her face with rapture; but added, "I cannot help telling your Ladyship you have not an handsome ear." "No!—Pray, Mr. Jervas, what is a handsome ear?" He turned aside his cap, and shewed his own!

 Like them to shine through long succeeding age,
 So just thy skill, so regular my rage.

Smit with the love of Sister-Arts we came,
 And met congenial, mingling flame with flame ;
 Like friendly colours found them both unite, 15
 And each from each contract new strength and light.
 How oft' in pleasing tasks we wear the day,
 While summer-suns roll unperceiv'd away ?
 How oft our slowly-growing works impart,
 While Images reflect from art to art ? 20
 How oft review ; each finding like a friend
 Something to blame, and something to commend ?

What flatt'ring scenes our wand'ring fancy wrought,
 Rome's pompous glories rising to our thought !
 Together o'er the Alps methinks we fly, 25
 Fir'd with Ideas of fair Italy.

genius and imagination; the one excelled in beauty, the other in energy. Michael Angelo has more of the poetical inspiration, his ideas are vast and sublime, his people are a superior order of beings; there is nothing about them, nothing in the air of their actions, or their attitudes, or the style and cast of their very limbs or features, that puts one in mind of their belonging to our own species. Raffaello's imagination is not so elevated; his figures are not so much disjoined from our own diminutive race of beings, though his ideas are chaste, noble, and of great conformity to their subjects. Michael Angelo's works have a strong, peculiar, and marked character; they seem to proceed from his own mind entirely, and that mind so rich and abundant, that he never needed, or seemed to disdain, to look abroad for foreign help. Raffaello's materials are generally borrowed, though the noble structure is his own. The excellency of this extraordinary man lay in the propriety, beauty, and majesty of his characters, his judicious contrivance of his composition, correctness of drawing, purity of taste, and the skilful accommodation of other men's conceptions to his own purpose. Nobody excelled him in that judgement, with which he united to his own observations on nature the energy of Michael Angelo, and the beauty and simplicity of the antique. To the question therefore, which ought to hold the first rank, Raffaello or Michael Angelo, it must be answered, that if it is given to him who possessed a greater combination of the higher qualities of the art than any other man, there is no doubt but Raffaello is the first. But if, according to Longinus, the sublime, being the highest excellence that human composition can attain to, abundantly compensates the absence of every other beauty, and atones for all other deficiencies, then Michael Angelo demands the preference.

“ These two extraordinary men carried some of the higher excellencies of the art to a higher degree of perfection than probably they ever arrived at before. They certainly have not been excelled, nor equalled since. Many of their successors were induced to leave

While Fancy brings the vanish'd piles to view,
 And builds imaginary Rome a-new,
 Here thy well-study'd marbles fix our eye;
 A fading Fresco here demands a sigh;
 Each heav'nly piece unwearied we compare, 35
 Match Raphael's grace with thy lov'd Guido's air,
 Carracci's strength, Correggio's softer line,
 Paulo's free stroke, and Titian's warmth divine.

How finish'd with illustrious toil appears!
 This small, well-polish'd Gem, the work of years!

this great road as a beaten path, endeavouring to surprise and please by something uncommon or new. When this desire after novelty has proceeded from mere idleness or caprice, it is not worth the trouble of criticism; but when it has been in consequence of a busy mind, of a peculiar complexion, it is always striking and interesting, never insipid.

“Such is the great style as it appears in those who possessed it at its height, in this, search after novelty, in conception or in treating the subject, has no place.”

VER. 30. Or seek] This last line is inferior to the three preceding ones: because it passes from particular images to something general.

VER. 33. Well-study'd marbles] Jervas was sent to Italy at the expence of Dr. Clarke, Member of Parliament for the University of Oxford, of All-Souls College.

VER. 37. Carracci's] “Give me a good outline, and bricks in the middle,” said Annibal Carracci. Agostino has left an elegant sonnet on painting. Sir Joshua Reynolds told me he did not think these artists exactly characterized by Pope.

VER. 39. How finish'd] Mr. Mason has translated Fresnoy with elegance and fidelity; and Sir Joshua Reynolds added to the translation learned, useful, scientific, and ingenious notes.

“Guido,”

Yet still how faint by precept is express 41
 The living image in the painter's breast?
 Thence endless streams of fair Ideas flow,
 Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow:
 Thence Beauty, waking all her forms, supplies 45
 An Angel's sweetness, or Bridgewater's eyes.

Muse!

NOTES.

"Guido," says Sir Joshua Reynolds, (Discourses, p. 155.), "from want of choice in adapting his subject to his ideas and powers, or in attempting to preserve beauty where it could not be preserved, has in this one point succeeded very ill. His figures are often engaged in subjects that required great expression; yet his Judith and Holofernes, the daughter of Herodias, with the Baptist's Head; the Andromeda, and even the Mothers of the Innocents, have little more expression than his Venus attired by the Graces."

And Mr. Webb observes, with his usual taste and penetration, "that Guido's Angel treads on Satan with all the preciseness and affected air of a modern dancing-master."

Few writers have succeeded in speaking of the fine arts. M. Falconet condemns what Tully has said on this subject in many of his epistles. Sir Joshua Reynolds told me more than once he did not approve of the thirty-ninth book of Pliny's Natural History. He thought that Quintilian, in the tenth chapter of his twelfth book, had spoken with more taste and precision than any other ancient author on painting. There are three dialogues of Fenelon on this subject exquisitely written.

VER. 40. The work of years!] Fresnoy employed above twenty years in finishing his poem. P.

VER. 43. Strike in the sketch,] Gray, in his verses to Mr. Bentley, has beautifully expressed and described the person and design:

"See, in their course, each transitory thought,
 Fix'd by his touch a lasting essence take;
 Each dream, in fancy's airy colouring wrought,
 To local symmetry and life awake."

Works, 4to.

Muse! at that Name thy sacred sorrows shed,
 Those tears eternal, that embalm the dead:
 Call round her Tomb each object of desire,
 Each purer frame inform'd with purer fire: 50
 Bid her be all that cheers or softens life,
 The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife:
 Bid her be all that makes mankind adore;
 Then view this Marble, and be vain no more!

Yet still her charms in breathing paint engage;
 Her modest cheek shall warm a future age. 56
 Beauty, frail flow'r, that ev'ry season fears,
 Blooms in thy colours for a thousand years.
 Thus Churchill's race shall other hearts surprize,
 And other Beauties envy Worsley's eyes; 60
 Each pleasing Blount shall endless smiles bestow,
 And soft Belinda's blush for ever glow.

Oh lasting as those Colours may they shine,
 Free as thy stroke, yet faultless as thy line;
 New graces yearly like thy works display, 65
 Soft without weakness, without glaring gay;
 Led by some rule, that guides, but not constrains;
 And finish'd more through happiness than pains.

The

NOTES.

VER. 60. Worsley's eyes ;] This was Frances Lady Worsley, Wife of Sir Robert Worsley, Bart. of Appuldercombe, in the Isle of Wight; Mother of Lady Carteret, Wife of John Lord Carteret, afterwards Earl Granville. There is an excellent letter of this Lady to Dr. Swift in his Letters, p. 77.

The kindred Arts shall in their praise conspire,
 One dip the pencil, and one string the lyre. 70
 Yet should the Graces all thy figures place,
 And breathe an air divine on ev'ry face;
 Yet should the Muses bid my numbers roll
 Strong as their charms, and gentle as their soul;
 With Zeuxis' Helen thy Bridgewater vie, 75
 And these be sung till Granville's Myra die:
 Alas! how little from the grave we claim!
 Thou but preserv'st a Face, and I a Name.

NOTES.

VER. 70. One dip the pencil,] The great Michael Angelo Buonoriti did both. See his Poems, printed at Florence, in 4to. 1623; some of which are very elegant, and nearly equal to Petrarch.

VER. 78. A name.] Pope used to say that Jervas translated Don Quixote without understanding Spanish. Warburton added a supplement to the preface of this translation, concerning the origin and nature of romances of chivalry; which supplement Pope extols in his letters; but the opinions in it are thoroughly and entirely confuted by Mr. Tyrwhit, in vol. ii. of Supplemental Observations on Shakespeare, p. 373.

EPISTLE

TO

MRS. BLOUNT,

WITH THE WORKS OF VOITURE.

IN these gay thoughts the Loves and Graces shine,
 And all the Writer lives in ev'ry line ;
 His easy Art may happy Nature seem,
 Trifles themselves are elegant in him.
 Sure to charm all was his peculiar fate, 5
 Who without flatt'ry pleas'd the fair and great ;
 Still with esteem no less convers'd than read ;
 With wit well-natur'd, and with books well-bred :
 His heart, his mistress and his friend did share,
 His time, the Muse, the witty, and the fair. 10
 Thus wisely careless, innocently gay,
 Cheerful he play'd the Trifle, Life, away ;
 Till fate scarce felt his gentle breath suppress'd,
 As smiling Infants sport themselves to rest,
 Ev'n rival Wits did Voiture's death deplore, 15
 And the gay mourn'd who never mourn'd before ;
The

NOTES.

VER. 1. In these gay] The works of Voiture, after having been idolized in France, are now justly sunk into neglect and oblivion.

The trueſt hearts for Voiture heav'd with ſighs,
 Voiture was wept by all the brighteſt Eyes:
 The Smiles and Loves had dy'd in Voiture's death,
 But that for ever in his lines they breathe. 20

Let the ſtrict life of graver mortals be
 A long, exact, and ſerious Comedy;
 In ev'ry ſcene ſome Moral let it teach,
 And, if it can, at once both pleaſe and preach.
 Let mine an innocent gay Farce appear, 25
 And more diverting ſtill than regular,
 Have Humour, Wit, a native Eaſe and Grace,
 Tho' not too ſtrictly bound to Time and Place:
 Critics in Wit, or Life, are hard to pleaſe,
 Few write to thoſe, and none can live to theſe. 30

Too much your Sex is by their forms confin'd,
 Severe to all, but moſt to Womankind;

Custom,

NOTES.

VER. 19. The ſmiles] Alluding to an elegant epitaph on Voiture:

“ Etruſcæ Veneres, Camænæ Iberæ,
 Hermes Gallicus, et Latina Siren;
 Riſus, Delicæ, et Dicacitates,
 Luſus, Ingenium, Joci, Lepores:
 Et quid quid unquam fuit elegantiarum,
 Quo Vecturius hoc jacent ſepulcro.”

Many curious particulars of his life may be found in the entertaining Miscellanies of Vigneul Marville, vol. ii. p. 409.

Corneille was invited to read his Polyeucte at the Hotel de Rambouillet, where the wits of that time aſſembled, and where Voiture preſided. It was coldly received; and Voiture was ſent to tell Corneille in gentle terms, that it was the opinion of his friends that Polyeucte would not ſucceed. Such judges were the moſt fashionable wits of France!

Custom, grown blind with Age, must be your guide ;
 Your pleasure is a vice, but not your pride ;
 By Nature yielding, stubborn but for fame: 35
 Made Slaves by honour, and made Fools by shame.
 Marriage may all those petty Tyrants chase,
 But sets up one, a greater in their place :
 Well might you wish for change by those accurst,
 But the last Tyrant ever proves the worst. 40

Still in constraint your suff'ring Sex remains,
 Or bound in formal, or in real chains :
 Whole years neglected, for some months ador'd,
 The fawning Servant turns a haughty Lord.
 Ah quit not the free innocence of life, 45
 For the dull glory of a virtuous Wife ;
 Nor let false Shews, nor empty Titles please :
 Aim not at Joy, but rest content with Ease.

The Gods, to curse Pamela with her pray'rs,
 Gave the gilt Coach, and dappled Flanders Mares,
 The shining robes, rich jewels, beds of state, 51
 And, to complete her bliss, a Fool for Mate.
 She glares in Balls, front Boxes, and the Ring,
 A vain, unquiet, glitt'ring, wretched Thing !
 Pride, Pomp, and State but reach her outward part ;
 She sighs, and is no Duchefs at her heart. 56

But, Madam, if the fates withstand, and you
 Are destin'd Hymen's willing Victim too ;
 Trust not too much your now resistless charms,
 Those, Age or Sickness, soon or late, disarms: 60

Good-

Good-humour only teaches charms to last,
 Still makes new conquests, and maintains the past ;
 Love, rais'd on Beauty, will like that decay,
 Our hearts may bear its slender chain a day ;
 As flow'ry bands in wantonness are worn, 65
 A morning's pleasure, and at evening torn ;
 This binds in ties more easy, yet more strong,
 The willing heart, and only holds it long.

Thus Voiture's early care still shone the same,
 And Monthausier was only chang'd in name : 70
 By this, ev'n now they live, ev'n now they charm,
 Their Wit still sparkling, and their flames still warm.

Now crown'd with Myrtle, on th' Elysian coast,
 Amid those Lovers, joys his gentle Ghost ;
 Pleas'd, while with smiles his happy lines you view,
 And finds a fairer Ramboüillet in you. 76

The

NOTES.

VER. 69. Thus Voiture's] Mademoiselle Paulet. P.

VER. 76. And finds a fairer] Our author's attachment to this lady ended but with his life. Her affectation and ill-temper gave him, however, many hours of uneasiness and disquiet. When she visited him in his very last illness, and her company seemed to give him fresh spirits, the antiquated prude could not be prevailed on to stay and pass the night at Twickenham, because of her reputation. She occasioned an unhappy breach betwixt him and his old friend Allen, because he would not lend his coach to carry her to a mas-house at Bath during his mayoralty.

The characteristical difference betwixt Voiture and Balsac is well expressed by Boileau, in two letters written under their names, from the Elysian Fields to the Duc de Vivonne, in p. 155. of vol. iii. of his works. And Boileau, speaking often of absurd readers and critics, loved to relate, that one of his relations, to whom he had presented his works, said to him, " Pray, Cousin,

The brightest eyes of France inspir'd his Muse;
 The brightest eyes of Britain now peruse;
 And dead, as living, 'tis our Author's pride
 Still to charm those who charm the world beside.

NOTES.

how came you to insert any other person's writings among your own? I find in your works two letters, one from Balsac, and the other from Voiture." Descartes, who, as well as Leibnitz, was an elegant scholar, wrote a judicious censure of Balsac, in admirable Latin. Balsac was, however, superior to Voiture. But he was affectedly turgid, pompous, and bloated, on all subjects and on all occasions alike. Yet was he the first that gave form and harmony to the French prose, which was still improved by the provincial letters of Pascal.

VER. 80. Beside.] This last word is a blemish to the piece, otherwise so correct.

TO THE SAME,

ON HER LEAVING THE TOWN AFTER THE CORONATION.

As some fond Virgin, whom her mother's care
 Drags from the Town to wholesome Country air,
 Just when she learns to roll a melting eye,
 And hear a spark, yet think no danger nigh ;
 From the dear man unwilling she must sever, 5
 Yet takes one kiss before she parts for ever :
 Thus from the world fair Zephalinda flew,
 Saw others happy, and with sighs withdrew ;
 Not that their pleasures caus'd her discontent,
 She sigh'd not that they stay'd, but that she went.

She went, to plain-work, and to purling brooks,
 Old-fashion'd halls, dull Aunts, and croaking rooks :
 She went from Op'ra, Park, Assembly, Play,
 To morning-walks, and pray'rs three hours a day ;

Coronation] Of King George the first, 1715.

P.

VER. 1. As some fond Virgin,] There is so much likeness (to use Johnson's words on another poem) in the initial comparison, that there is no illustration. As one lady lamented the going out of London, so did another.

To part her time 'twixt reading and bohea, 15
 To muse, and spill her solitary tea,
 Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon,
 Count the flow clock, and dine exact at noon :
 Divert her eyes with pictures in the fire,
 Hum half a tune, tell stories to the squire ; 20
 Up to her godly garret after sev'n,
 There starve and pray, for that's the way to heav'n.

Some Squire, perhaps, you take delight to rack ;
 Whose game is Whisk, whose treat a toast in sack ;
 Who visits with a Gun, presents you birds, 25
 Then gives a smacking buss, and cries,—No words !
 Or with his hound comes hallooing from the stable ;
 Makes love with nods, and knees beneath a table ;
 Whose laughs are hearty, tho' his jests are coarse,
 And loves you best of all things—but his horse. 30

In some fair ev'ning, on your elbow laid,
 You dream of Triumphs in the rural shade ;
 In pensive thought recall the fancy'd scene,
 See Coronations rise on ev'ry green ;
 Before you pass th' imaginary fights 35
 Of Lords, and Earls, and Dukes, and garter'd Knights,
 While the spread fan o'er shades your closing eyes ;
 Then give one flirt, and all the vision flies.

Thus

NOTES.

VER. 23. Squire,] No country Squire has ever been painted with such true and natural features and colours as Addison's Tory Foxhunter, in the Freeholder, except perhaps Western, in that capital picture of life, the History of Tom Jones.

Thus vanish sceptres, coronets, and balls,
 And leave you in lone woods, or empty walls! 40
 So when your Slave, at some dear idle time,
 (Not plagu'd with head-achs, or the want of rhyme)
 Stands in the streets, abstracted from the crew,
 And while he seems to study, thinks of you;
 Just when his fancy points your sprightly eyes, 45
 Or sees the blush of soft Parthenia rise,
 Gay pats my shoulder, and you vanish quite,
 Streets, Chairs, and Coxcombs rush upon my fight;
 Vex'd to be still in town, I knit my brow,
 Look four, and hum a Tune, as you may now. 50

NOTES.

VER. 46. Of soft Parthenia rise,] It does not seem perfectly gallant to introduce the name of another lady.

THE BASSET-TABLE.

AN ECLOGUE.

CARDELIA. SMILINDA.

CARDELIA.

THE Basset-Table spread, the Tallier come;
 Why stays SMILINDA in the Dressing-Room?
 Rise, pensive Nymph, the Tallier waits for you:

SMILINDA.

Ah, Madam, since my SHARPER is untrue,
 I joyless make my once ador'd Alpeu. 5
 I saw him stand behind OMBRELIA's Chair,
 And whisper with that soft, deluding air,
 And those feign'd sighs which cheat the list'ning Fair.

CAR-

NOTES.

VER. 1. The Basset-Table spread,] There were six Town Eclogues; two written by Mr. Pope, and the rest by Lady Wortley Montague, whose fine genius and abilities are well-known; and from whose hand I am glad to present the reader with the following Sonnet, preserved by Algarotti, in the seventh volume of his works:

“ Thou Silver Deity of secret night,
 Direct my footsteps through the Woodland shade;
 Thou conscious witness of unknown delight,
 The Lover's Guardian, and the Muse's aid.

By

CARDELIA.

Is this the cause of your Romantic strains?
 A mightier grief my heavy heart sustains: 10
 As You by Love, so I by Fortune cross't;
 One, one bad Deal, Three Septlevar have lost.

SMILINDA.

Is that the grief which you compare with mine?
 With ease, the smiles of Fortune I resign:
 Would all my gold in one bad Deal were gone; 15
 Were lovely SHARPER mine, and mine alone.

CARDELIA.

A Lover lost, is but a common care:
 And prudent Nymphs against that change prepare:
 The KNAVE OF CLUBS thrice lost! Oh! who could guess
 This fatal Stroke, this unforeseen Distress? 20

SMI-

NOTES.

By thy pale beams I solitary rove,
 To thee my tender grief confide;
 Serenely sweet you gild the silent grove,
 My friend, my goddess, and my guide.
 Ev'n thee, fair Queen, from thy amazing height
 The charms of young Endimion drew,
 Veil'd in the mantle of concealing night,
 With all thy greatness, and thy coldness too!"

SMILINDA.

See BETTY LOVET! very à propos,
 She all the cares of Love and Play does know;
 Dear BETTY shall th' important point decide;
 BETTY, who oft the pain of each has try'd;
 Impartial, she shall say who suffers most, 25
 By Cards' Ill Usage, or by Lovers lost.

LOVET.

Tell, tell your griefs; attentive will I stay,
 Tho' Time is precious, and I want some Tea.

CARDELIA.

Behold this Equipage, by Mathers wrought,
 With Fifty Guineas (a great Pen'worth) bought. 30
 See on the Tooth-pick, Mars and Cupid strive;
 And both the struggling figures seem alive.
 Upon the bottom shines the Queen's bright Face;
 A Myrtle Foliage round the Thimble-Cafe.
 Jove, Jove himself, does on the Scissars shine; 35
 The Metal, and the Workmanship, divine!

SMILINDA.

This Snuff-Box,—once the pledge of SHARPER'S love,
 When rival beauties for the Present strove;

At

At Corticelli's he the Ruffle won ;
 Then first his Passion was in public shown : 40
 HAZARDIA blush'd, and turn'd her head aside,
 A Rival's envy (all in vain) to hide.
 This Snuff-Box—on the Hinge see Brilliants shine :
 This Snuff-Box will I stake; the Prize is mine.

CARDELIA.

Alas! far lesser losses than I bear, 45
 Have made a Soldier sigh, a Lover swear.
 And Oh! what makes the disappointment hard,
 'Twas my own Lord that drew the fatal Card.
 In complaisance, I took the Queen he gave;
 Tho' my own secret wish was for the Knave. 50
 The Knave won Sonica, which I had chose;
 And the next Pull, my Septleva I lose.

SMILINDA.

But ah! what aggravates the killing smart,
 The cruel thought, that stabs me to the heart ;
 This curs'd OMBRELIA, this undoing Fair, 55
 By whose vile arts this heavy grief I bear ;
 She, at whose name I shed these spiteful tears,
 She owes to me the very charms she wears.
 An aukward Thing, when first she came to Town ;
 Her shape unfashion'd, and her Face unknown : 60
 She was my friend ; I taught her first to spread
 Upon her fallow cheeks enliv'ning red :

I in-

I introduc'd her to the Park and Plays ;
 And by my int'rest, Cozens made her Stays.
 Ungrateful wretch, with mimick airs grown pert, 65
 She dares to steal my Fav'rite Lover's heart.

CARDELIA.

Wretch that I was, how often have I swore,
 When WINNALL tally'd, I would punt no more ?
 I know the Bite, yet to my Ruin run ;
 And see the Folly, which I cannot shun. 70

SMILINDA.

How many Maids have SHARPER'S vows deceiv'd ?
 How many curs'd the moment they believ'd ?
 Yet his known falsehoods could no warning prove :
 Ah ! what is warning to a Maid in Love ?

CARDELIA.

But of what marble must that breast be form'd,
 To gaze on Basset, and remain unwarm'd ? 76
 When Kings, Queens, Knaves, are set in decent rank ;
 Expos'd in glorious heaps the tempting Bank,
 Guineas, Half-Guineas, all the shining train ;
 The Winner's pleasure, and the Loser's pain : 80
 In bright confusion open Rouleaus lie,
 They strike the Soul, and glitter in the eye.
 Fir'd by the sight, all Reason I disdain ;
 My Passions rise, and will not bear the rein.

Look

Look upon Basset, you who Reason boast ; 85
 And see if Reason must not there be lost.

SMILINDA.

What more than marble must that heart compose,
 Can hearken coldly to my SHARPER'S Vows?
 Then, when he trembles! when his blushes rise!
 When awful Love seems melting in his eyes! 90
 With eager beats his Mechlin Cravat moves:
He Loves,—I whisper to myself, He Loves!
 Such unfeign'd Passion in his Looks appears,
 I lose all Mem'ry of my former Fears;
 My panting heart confesses all his charms, 95
 I yield at once, and sink into his arms:
 Think of that moment, you who Prudence boast;
 For such a moment, Prudence well were lost.

CARDELIA.

At the Groom-Porter's, batter'd Bullies play,
 Some DUKES at Mary-Bone bowl Time away. 100
 But who the Bowl, or ratt'ling Dice compares
 To Basset's heavenly Joys, and pleasing Cares?

SMILINDA.

Soft SIMPLICETTA doats upon a Beau;
 PRUDINA likes a Man, and laughs at Show.
 Their several graces in my SHARPER meet; 105
 Strong as the Footman, as the Master sweet.

LOVET.

Cease your contention, which has been too long ;
 I grow impatient, and the Tea's too strong.
 Attend, and yield to what I now decide ;
 The Equipage shall grace SMILINDA's Side ; 110
 The Snuff-Box to CARDELIA I decree,
 Now leave complaining, and begin your Tea.

GRAY wrote a Quaker's Eclogue, and Swift a Footman's Eclogue ; and said to Pope, " I think the Pastoral Ridicule is not exhausted ; what think you of a Newgate Pastoral, among the whores and thieves there ?" When Lady M. W. Montague would sometimes shew a copy of her verses to Pope, and he would make some little alterations, " No," said she, " Pope, no touching ! for then, whatever is good for any thing will pass for yours, and the rest for mine."

VERBATIM FROM BOILEAU.

UN JOUR DIT UN AUTEUR, etc.

ONCE (says an Author, where I need not say)
 Two Trav'lers found an Oyster in their way;
 Both fierce, both hungry; the dispute grew strong,
 While Scale in hand Dame Justice past along.
 Before her each with clamour pleads the Laws,
 Explain'd the matter, and would win the cause.
 Dame Justice weighing long the doubtful Right,
 Takes, opens, swallows it, before their sight.
 The cause of strife remov'd so rarely well,
 There take (says Justice) take ye each a Shell.
 We thrive at Westminster on Fools like you:
 'Twas a fat Oyster—Live in peace—Adieu.

IT will be no unuseful or unpleasing amusement to compare this translation with the original:

“ Un jour, dit un Auteur, n'importe en quel chapitre,
 Deux voyageurs à jeun rencontrèrent une huitre,
 Tous deux la contestoient, lorsque dans leur chemin,
 La justice passa, la balance à la main.
 Devant elle à grand bruit ils expliquent la chose.
 Tous deux avec depens veulent gagner leur cause.
 La justice pesant ce droit litigieux,
 Demande l'huitre, l'ouvre, & l'avale à leur yeux,
 Et par ce bel arrest terminant la bataille:
 Tenez voilà, dit elle, à chacun une écaille.
 Des sottises d'autrui, nous vivons au palais;
 Messieurs, l'huitre étoit bonne. Adieu, Vivez en paix.”

In the fifth, sixth, seventh, ninth, and twelfth verses, Pope is inferior to the original.

ANSWER TO THE FOLLOWING QUESTION OF MRS. HOW.

WHAT IS PRUDERY?

'Tis a Beldam,
Seen with Wit and Beauty feldom.
'Tis a fear that starts at shadows;
'Tis, (no, 'tis'n't) like Miss Meadows.
'Tis a Virgin hard of Feature,
Old, and void of all good-nature;
Lean and fretful; would seem wise;
Yet plays the fool before she dies.
'Tis an ugly envious Shrew,
That rails at dear Lepell and You.

AMONG these smaller poems of our author, the following couplet used to be printed, on a dog's collar, which he gave to the Prince of Wales:

“ I am his Highness's dog at Kew;
Pray tell me, Sir, whose dog are you ?”

Which was taken from Sir William Temple's Miscellanies, vol. iii. p. 323. said to be the answer of Mr. Grantham's Fool to one who asked him whose fool he was.

OCCASIONED BY SOME VERSES OF HIS GRACE
THE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM.

MUSE, 'tis enough: at length thy labour ends,
And thou shalt live, for Buckingham commends.
Let Crowds of Critics now my Verse assail,
Let Dennis write, and nameless numbers rail:
This more than pays whole years of thankless pain,
Time, health, and fortune, are not lost in vain.
Sheffield approves, consenting Phoebus bends,
And I and Malice from this hour are friends.

NOTES.

VER. 2. Buckingham commends.] It would be difficult to add any thing to the finished portrait of this nobleman, given by Mr. Walpole in his Anecdotes, vol. ii. p. 118.

VER. 5 and 6. This more] A very groundless complaint! Few authors, during their lives, were more respected and revered than himself by persons of rank and judges of merit.

A PROLOGUE

BY MR. POPE,

To a Play for Mr. DENNIS's Benefit, in 1733, when he was old, blind, and in great Distress, a little before his Death.

AS when that Hero, who in each Campaign,
 Had brav'd the Goth, and many a Vandal slain,
 Lay fortune-struck, a spectacle of Woe!
 Wept by each Friend, forgiv'n by ev'ry Foe;
 Was there a generous, a reflecting mind,
 But pitied BELISARIUS old and blind?
 Was there a Chief but melted at the Sight?
 A common Soldier, but who clubb'd his Mite?

Such

NOTES.

VER. 6. But pitied Belisarius, &c.] Nothing could be more happily imagined than this allusion, nor more finely conducted. The continued pleasantry is so delicately touched, that it took nothing from the self-satisfaction which the critic who heard it, had in his own merit, or the audience in their charity. In a word, this benevolent irony is prosecuted with so masterly a hand, that the Poet supposed, had Dennis himself the wit to see it, he would have had the ingenuity to approve of it.

“ This dreaded Sat'rist, Dennis will confess,
 Foe to his pride, but friend to his distress.” W.

VER. 7. Was there a Chief, &c.] The fine figure of the Commander in that capital picture of Balisarius at Chiswick, supplied the Poet with this beautiful idea. W.

Such, such emotions should in Britons rise,
 When press'd by want and weakness DENNIS lies;
Dennis, who long had warr'd with modern Huns,
 Their Quibbles routed; and defy'd their Puns;
 A desp'rate Bulwark, sturdy, firm, and fierce
 Against the Gothic Sons of frozen verse:
 How chang'd from him who made the boxes groan,
 And shook the stage with Thunders all his own! 16
 Stood up to dash each vain PRETENDER'S hope,
 Maul the French Tyrant, or pull down the POPE!
 If there's a Briton then, true bred and born,
 Who holds Dragoons and wooden shoes in scorn;
 If there's a Critic of distinguish'd rage; 21
 If there's a Senior, who contemns this age;

Let him to-night his just assistance lend,
And be the Critic's, Briton's, Old Man's Friend.

NOTES.

Bitter satire is concealed under the appearance of these topics of pity and commiseration. It is said that poor Dennis did not perceive the force of these sarcasms, and heard the prologue spoke with great complacency. Mallet and Thomson also interested themselves much in procuring the old man a good benefit.

MACER.

A CHARACTER.

WHEN simple Macer, now of high renown,
 First sought a Poet's Fortune in the Town,
 'Twas all th' Ambition his high soul could feel,
 To wear red Stockings, and to dine with Steel.

Some

NOTES.

VER. 1. When simple Macer,] Said to be the character of James Moore Smyth, author of the Rival Modes, a comedy, in 1726. He pilfered verses from Pope. He joined in a political paper with the Duke of Wharton, called The Inquisitor, written with such violence against government, that he was soon obliged to drop it. This character was first printed in the Miscellanies of Swift and Pope, 1727, concerning which the following anecdote is transcribed from Dr. Birch's manuscripts in the British Museum:

"August 17, 1749. Mr. George Faulkner, of Dublin, told me, that Dr. Swift had long conceived a mean opinion of Mr. Pope, on account of his jealous, peevish, avaricious temper. The Doctor gave Mr. Pope the property of his Gulliver, which he sold the copy of for three hundred pounds; and gave up to him, in 1727, his share of the copy of the three volumes of their Miscellanies, which came to one hundred and fifty pounds. The Doctor was angry with Mr. Pope for his satire upon Mr. Addison, whom the former esteemed as an honest, generous, and friendly man. Wordsdale the painter was employed by Mr. Pope to go to Curl in the habit of a clergyman, and sell him the printed copies of his Letters. Mr. Pope sent to Ireland to Dr. Swift, by Mr. Gerrard, an Irish gentleman, then at Bath, a printed copy of their letters, with an anonymous letter, which occasioned Dr. Swift to give Mr. Faulkner leave to reprint them at Dublin, though Mr. Pope's Edition was published first."

Some Ends of verse his betters might afford, 5
And gave the harmless fellow a good word.

Set up with these, he ventur'd on the Town,
And with a borrow'd Play, out-did poor Crown.
There he stop'd short, nor since has writ a tittle,
But has the wit to make the most of little: 10

Like stunted hide-bound Trees that just have got Sufficient Sap at once to bear and rot.

Now he begs Verse, and what he gets commends,
Not of the Wits his foes, but Fools, his friends.

So some coarse Country Wench, almost decay'd,
Trudges to town, and first turns Chambermaid; 16

Aukward and supple, each devoir to pay;

She flatters her good Lady twice a day;

Thought wond'rous honest, though of mean degree,
And strangely lik'd for her Simplicity: 20

In a translated Suit, then tries the Town,

With borrow'd Pins, and Patches not her own:

But just endur'd the winter she began,

And in four months a batter'd Harridan. 24

Now nothing left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,

To bawd for others, and go shares with Punk.

NOTES.

I would observe, on this anecdote, that it is not very probable that Swift should condemn Pope's Verses on Addison, as they were first printed in the Miscellanies; which publication was their joint work; and the verses themselves are mentioned in the preface to these Miscellanies.

VER. 4. To wear red Stockings,] I remember old Demoivre told me, above fifty years ago, that all he remembered of Corneille was, that he had seen him in red stockings at the theatre.

TO MR. JOHN MOORE,

AUTHOR OF THE CELEBRATED WORM-POWDER.

How much, egregious Moore, are we
Deceiv'd by shews and forms!

Whate'er we think, whate'er we see,

All Humankind are Worms.

Man is a very Worm by birth,

Vile, reptile, weak and vain!

A while he crawls upon the earth,

Then shrinks to earth again.

That Woman is a Worm, we find

E'er since our Grandame's evil;

She first convers'd with her own kind,

That ancient Worm, the Devil.

The Learn'd themselves we Book-worms name,

The Blockhead is a Slow-worm;

The Nymph whose tail is all on flame,

Is aptly term'd a Glow-worm.

The Fops are painted Butterflies,

That flutter for a day;

First from a Worm they take their rise,

And in a Worm decay.

The Flatterer an Earwig grows ;
 Thus Worms suit all conditions ;
 Misers are Muck-worms, Silk-worms Beaus,
 And Death-watches Physicians.

That Statesmen have the Worm, is seen,
 By all their winding play ;
 Their Conscience is a Worm within,
 That gnaws them night and day.

Ah Moore! thy skill were well employ'd,
 And greater gain would rise,
 If thou couldst make the Courtier void
 The worm that never dies !

O learned Friend of Abchurch-Lane,
 Who sett'st our entrails free !
 Vain is thy Art, thy Powder vain,
 Since Worms shall eat ev'n thee.

Our Fate thou only canst adjourn
 Some few short years, no more !
 Ev'n Button's Wits to Worms shall turn,
 Who Maggots were before.

SONG,

BY A PERSON OF QUALITY.

WRITTEN IN THE YEAR 1733.

I.

FLU^TT'RING spread thy purple Pinions,
 Gentle Cupid, o'er my heart ;
 I a Slave in thy Dominions ;
 Nature must give Way to Art.

II.

Mild Arcadians, ever blooming,
 Nightly nodding o'er your Flocks,
 See my weary Days consuming,
 All beneath yon flow'ry Rocks.

III.

Thus the Cyprian Goddess weeping,
 Mourn'd Adonis, darling Youth :
 Him the Boar, in Silence creeping,
 Gor'd with unrelenting Tooth.

IV.

Cynthia, tune harmonious Numbers ;
 Fair Discretion, string the Lyre ;
 Sooth my ever-waking Slumbers ;
 Bright Apollo, lend thy Choir.

V.

Gloomy Pluto, King of Terrors,
 Arm'd in adamantine Chains,
 Lead me to the Crystal Mirrors,
 Wat'ring soft Elyfian plains.

VI.

Mournful Cypress, verdant Willow,
 Gilding my Aurelia's Brows,
Morpheus hov'ring o'er my Pillow,
 Hear me pay my dying Vows.

VII.

Melancholy smooth Maeander,
 Swiftly purling in a Round,
 On thy Margin Lovers wander,
 With thy flow'ry Chaplets crown'd,

VIII.

Thus when Philomela, drooping,
 Softly seeks her silent Mate,
 See the Bird of Juno stooping;
 Melody resigns to Fate.

IV.

THE above is a pleasant burlesque on the gawdy, glittering, florid style and manner of certain descriptive poets. I think the reader will pardon me for laying before him part of a piece of ridicule on the same subject, and of equal merit, which made its first appearance many years ago in the Oxford Student, and is thus entitled, "Ode to Horror, in the Allegoric, Descriptive, Alliterative, Epithetical, Fantastic, Hyperbolic, and Diabolical Style of our Modern Ode-Writers and Monody-Mongers."

———— "Ferreus ingrui Horror." VIRG.

" O Goddess of the gloomy scene,
 Of shadowy shapes, thou black-brow'd Queen ;
 Thy tresses dark with ivy crown'd,
 On yonder mould'ring abbey found ;
 Oft wont from charnels damp and dim,
 To call the sheeted spectre grim,
 While as his loose chains loudly clink,
 Thou add'st a length to ev'ry link :
 O thou, that lov'st at eve to seek
 The pensive-pacing pilgrim meek,
 And sett'st before his shudd'ring eyes
 Strange forms, and fiends of giant-size,
 As wildly works thy wizzard will,
 'Till fear-struck fancy has her fill :
 Dark pow'r, whose magic-might prevails
 O'er hermit-rocks and fairy-vales ;
 O Goddess, erst by Spenser view'd,
 What time th' Enchanter vile embru'd
 His hands in Florimel's pure heart,
 Till loos'd by steel-clad Britomart :
 O thou that erst on fancy's wing
 Didst terror-trembling Tasso bring,
 To groves where kept damn'd Furies dire
 Their blue-tipt battlements of fire ;
 Thou that thro' many a darksome pine,
 O'er the rugged rock recline,

Did'st

Did'st wake the hollow-whisp'ring breeze
 With care-confum'd Eloise :
 O thou, with whom in cheerless cell,
 The midnight clock pale pris'ners tell ;
 O haste thee, mild Miltonic maid,
 From yonder yews sequester'd shade ;
 More bright than all the fabled nine,
 Teach me to breathe the solemn line :
 O bid my well-rang'd numbers rise,
 Pervious to none but Attic eyes ;
 O give the strain that madness moves,
 Till every starting sense approves.

What felt the Gallic Traveller,
 When far in Arab-desert drear,
 He found within the Catacomb,
 Alive, the terrors of a tomb ?
 While many a mummy thro' the shade,
 In hieroglyphic stole array'd,
 Seem'd to uprear the mystic head,
 And trace the gloom with ghostly tread ;
 Thou heard'st him pour the stifled groan,
 Horror ! his soul was all thy own !"

The author was himself a descriptive poet of the first class. Mr. William Collins thought himself aimed at by this piece of ridicule. His odes had been just published ; and the last lines seem'd to refer to a particular passage in them.

ON A CERTAIN LADY AT COURT.

I KNOW the thing that's most uncommon;
 (Envy be silent, and attend!)

I know a reasonable Woman,
 Handsome and witty, yet a Friend.

Not warp'd by Passion, aw'd by Rumour,
 Not grave through Pride, or gay through Folly,
 An equal Mixture of good Humour,
 And sensible soft Melancholy.

“ Has she no faults then (Envy says) Sir ?”
 Yes, she has one, I must aver ;
 When all the World conspires to praise her,
 The Woman's deaf and does not hear.

NOTES.

VER. 1. I know the thing] Equal in elegance to any compliment that Waller has paid to Saccharissa, especially the last stanza, and the answer to Envy. The Lady address'd was Mrs. Howard, of Marble-hill, bed-chamber woman to Queen Caroline, and afterwards Countess of Suffolk.

ON HIS GROTTO AT TWICKENHAM,

COMPOSED OF

MARBLES, SPARS, GEMMS, ORES, AND MINERALS.

THOU who shalt stop, where Thames' translucent wave
 Shines a broad Mirror through the shadowy Cave ;
 Where ling'ring drops from min'ral Roofs distil,
 And pointed Crystals break the sparkling Rill,
 Unpolish'd Gemms no ray on Pride bestow,
 And latent Metals innocently glow ;
 Approach. Great NATURE studiously behold !
 And eye the Mine without a wish for Gold.
 Approach ;

VARIATIONS.

After VER. 6. in the MS.

You see that Island's wealth, where, only free,
 Earth to her entrails feels not Tyranny.

i. e. Britain is the only place in the globe which feels not tyranny even to its very entrails.

W.

NOTES.

On his Grotto] The improving and finishing his Grott was the favourite amusement of his declining years ; and the beauty of his poetic genius, in the disposition and ornaments of this romantic recess, appears to as much advantage as in his best contrived poems.

W.

VER. 8. Eye the Mine]

" Aurum irrepertum, et sic melius situm
 Cum terra calet."

HORAT. l. 3. od. 3.

Approach: But awful! Lo! th' Aegerian Grott, 9
 Where, nobly-pensive, ST. JOHN fate and thought;
 Where British sighs from dying WYNDHAM stole,
 And the bright flame was shot through MARCH-
 MONT'S Soul.

Let such, such only, tread this sacred Floor,
 Who dare to love their country, and be poor.

VARIATIONS.

VER. 11. Where British sighs from dying Wyndham stole,] In his MS. it was thus:

To Wyndham's breast the patriot passions stole, which made the whole allude to a certain anecdote of not much consequence to any but the parties concerned. W.

NOTES.

VER. 9. Aegerian Grott,] These are two charming lines; but are blemished by two bad rhymes, Grott to Thought; scarce excusable in so short a poem, in which every syllable ought to be correct.

It is remarkable that Juvenal having mentioned this celebrated cave, takes occasion to inveigh against artificial grotto-work, and adulterating the simple beauties of nature, in lines uncommonly poetical:

“ In vallem Ægeriæ descendimus, et Speluncas
 Dissimiles veris; quanto præstantius esset
 Numen aquæ, viridi si margine clauderet undas
 Herba, nec ingenium violarent marmora tophum.”

Sat. iii. v. 17.

Milton, in an exquisite Latin poem, address'd to Salsillus, vol. ii. p. 532. has beautifully feigned that Numa is still living in this dark grove and grotto, in the perpetual enjoyment of his Ægeria.

TO MRS. M. B.

ON HER BIRTH-DAY.

OH be thou blest with all that Heav'n can send,
 Long Health, long Youth, long Pleasure, and a Friend :

Not with those Toys the female world admire,
 Riches that vex, and Vanities that tire.
 With added years if Life bring nothing new, 5
 But like a Sieve let ev'ry blessing through,
 Some joy still lost, as each vain year runs o'er,
 And all we gain, some sad Reflection more ;
 Is that a Birth-day? 'tis alas ! too clear,
 'Tis but the Fun'ral of the former year. 10

Let Joy or Ease, let Affluence or Content,
 And the gay Conscience of a life well spent,
 Calm

NOTES.

VER. 10. 'Tis but] Immediately after this line were these four following, in the original :

“ If there's no hope, with kind, tho' fainter ray,
 To gild the evening of our future day ;
 If every page of life's long volume tell
 The same dull story, Mordaunt, thou didst well !”

Colonel Mordaunt, who destroyed himself, though not under the pressure of any ill or misfortune.

Calm ev'ry thought, in spirit ev'ry grace,
 Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face.
 Let day improve on day, and year on year, 15
 Without a Pain, a Trouble, or a Fear;
 Till Death unfelt that tender frame destroy,
 In some soft Dream, or Extasy of Joy,
 Peaceful sleep out the Sabbath of the Tomb,
 And wake to Raptures in a Life to come.

VARIATIONS.

VER. 15. Originally thus in the MS.

And oh since Death must that fair frame destroy,
 Die, by some sudden extasy of joy;
 In some soft dream may thy mild soul remove,
 And be thy latest gasp a sigh of love.

TO MR. THOMAS SOUTHERN,
ON HIS BIRTH-DAY, 1742.

RESIGN'D to live, prepar'd to die,
With not one sin, but Poetry,
This day Tom's fair account has run
(Without a blot) to eighty-one.
Kind Boyle, before his poet, lays
A table, with a cloth of bays;
And Ireland, mother of sweet fingers,
Presents her harp still to his fingers.

The

NOTES.

VER. 3. This Day Tom's] This amiable writer lived the longest, and died one of the richest, of all our poets. In 1737, Mr. Gray, writing to a friend, says very agreeably, "We have here old Mr. Southern, who often comes to see us; he is now seventy-seven years old, and has almost wholly lost his memory; but is as agreeable an old man as can be, at least I persuade myself so, when I look at him, and think of Isabella and Oroonoko." He was certainly a great master of the pathetic; and in the latter part of his life became sensible of the impropriety he had been guilty of in mixing Tragedy with Comedy. He was the first play-writer that had the benefit of a third night. He told Dryden that he once had cleared seven hundred pounds by one of his plays.

VER. 6. A table,] Mr. Southern was invited to dine on his birthday with this nobleman, (Lord Orrery), who had prepared for him the entertainment of which the bill of fare is here set down. W.

VER. 8. Presents her harp] The harp is generally wove on the Irish linen; such as table cloths, &c. W.

The feast, his tow'ring genius marks
 In yonder wild goofe and the larks! 10
 The mushrooms shew his wit was sudden!
 And for his judgment, lo a pudden!
 Roast beef, tho' old, proclaims him stout,
 And grace, altho' a bard, devout.
 May Tom, whom heav'n sent down to raise 15
 The price of prologues and of plays,
 Be ev'ry birth-day more a winner,
 Digest his thirty thousandth dinner;
 Walk to his grave without reproach,
 And scorn a rascal and a coach. 20

NOTES.

VER. 16. The price of prologues and of plays,] This alludes to a story Mr. Southern told of Dryden, about the same time, to Mr. P. and Mr. W.—When Southern first wrote for the stage, Dryden was so famous for his prologues, that the players would act nothing without that decoration. His usual price till then had been four guineas; but when Southern came to him for the prologue he had bespoken, Dryden told him he must have six guineas for it; “which (said he) young man, is out of no disrespect to you, but the players have had my goods too cheap.”—We now look upon these prologues with the same admiration that the virtuosi do on the apothecaries pots painted by Raphael. W.

ROXANA, OR THE DRAWING-ROOM.

AN ECLOGUE.

ROXANA from the court returning late,
 Sigh'd her soft sorrow at St. James's gate :
 Such heavy thoughts lay brooding in her breast ;
 Not her own chairmen with more weight oppress'd :
 They curse the cruel weight they're doom'd to bear ;
 She in more gentle sounds express'd her care.

Was it for this, that I these roses wear ?
 For this, new-set the jewels for my hair ?
 Ah Princess ! with what zeal have I pursu'd ?
 Almost forgot the duty of a prude.
 'This King, I never could attend too soon ;
 I miss'd my pray'rs, to get me dress'd by noon.
 For thee, ah ! what for thee did I resign ?
 My passions, pleasures, all that e'er was mine :
 I've sacrific'd both modesty and ease ;
 Left operas, and went to filthy plays :
 Double entendres shock'd my tender ear ;
 Yet even this, for thee, I chuse to bear :
 In glowing youth, when nature bids be gay,
 And ev'ry joy of life before me lay ;
 By honour prompted, and by pride restrain'd,
 The pleasures of the young my soul disdain'd :
 Sermons I sought, and with a mien severe,
 Censur'd my neighbours, and said daily pray'r.

Alas,

Alas, how chang'd ! with this same sermon-mien,
The filthy What-d'ye-call-it—I have seen.
Ah, royal Princess! for whose sake I lost
The reputation, which so dear had cost ;
I, who avoided ev'ry public place,
When bloom and beauty bid me show my face,
Now near thee, constant, I each night abide,
With never-failing duty by my side ;
Myself and daughters standing in a row,
To all the foreigners a goodly show.
Oft had your drawing-room been sadly thin,
And merchants wives close by your side had been ;
Had I not amply fill'd the empty place,
And sav'd your Highness from the dire disgrace :
Yet Cockatilla's artifice prevails,
When all my duty and my merit fails :
That Cockatilla, whose deluding airs
Corrupts our virgins, and our youth ensnares ;
So sunk her character, and lost her fame,
Scarce visited, before your Highness came ;
Yet for the bed-chamber, 'tis she you chuse,
Whilst zeal, and fame, and virtue you refuse.
Ah worthy choice ; not one of all your train
Which censures blast not, or dishonours stain.
I know the court, with all its treach'rous wiles,
The false careffes, and undoing smiles.
Ah Princess ! learn'd in all the courtly arts,
To cheat our hopes, and yet to gain our hearts.

TO LADY MARY WORTLEY MONTAGUE.

I.

IN beauty, or wit,
 No mortal as yet
 To question your empire has dar'd ;
 But men of discerning
 Have thought that in learning,
 To yield to a lady was hard.

II.

Impertinent schools,
 With musty dull rules,
 Have reading to females deny'd :
 So papists refuse
 The Bible to use,
 Left flocks shou'd be wise as their guide.

'Twas a woman at first,
 (Indeed she was curst)
 In knowledge that tasted delight,
 And fages agree
 The laws shou'd decree
 To the first possessor the right.

IV.

Then bravely, fair dame,
Resume the old claim,
Which to your whole sex does belong;
And let men receive,
From a second bright Eve,
The knowledge of right and of wrong.

But if the first Eve
Hard doom did receive,
When only one apple had she,
What a punishment new
Shall be found out for you,
Who tasting, have robb'd the whole tree?

THE TRANSLATOR.

OZELL, at Sanger's call, invok'd his Muse,
 For who to sing for Sanger cou'd refuse?
 His numbers such as Sanger's self might use.
 Reviving Perault, murd'ring Boileau, he
 Slander'd the ancients first, then Wycherley;
 Which yet not much that old bard's anger rais'd,
 Since those were slander'd most, whom Ozell prais'd.
 Nor had the gentle satire caus'd complaining,
 Had not sage Rowe pronounc'd it entertaining;
 How great must be the judgment of that writer,
 Who the Plain-dealer damns, and prints the Biter!

EGBERT SANGER served his apprenticeship with Jacob Tonson, and succeeded Bernard Lintot in his shop at Middle Temple Gate, Fleet-street. Lintot printed Ozell's translation of Perrault's Characters, and Sanger his translation of Boileau's Lutrin, recommended by Mr. Rowe, Anno 1709.

THE LOOKING-GLASS.

ON MRS. PULTENEY.

WITH scornful mien, and various tofs of air,
Fantastic, vain, and insolently fair,
Grandeur intoxicates her giddy brain,
She looks ambition, and she moves disdain.
Far other carriage grac'd her virgin life,
But charming G—y's lost, in P—y's wife.
Not greater arrogance in him we find,
And this conjunction swells at least her mind:
O could the fire, renown'd in glass, produce
One faithful mirror for his daughter's use!
Wherein she might her haughty errors trace,
And by reflection learn to mend her face:
The wonted sweetness to her form restore,
Be what she was, and charm mankind once more.

A FAREWELL TO LONDON

IN THE YEAR 1714.

DEAR, damn'd, distracting town, farewell!
 Thy fools no more I'll teize:
 This year in peace, ye critics, dwell,
 Ye harlots, sleep at ease!

Soft B - - s and rough C - - -, adieu!
 Earl Warwick make your moan,
 The lively H - - - k and you
 May knock up whores alone.

To drink and droll be Rowe allow'd
 Till the third watchman's toll;
 Let Jervase gratis paint, and Frowde
 Save three-pence and his soul.

Farewell Arbuthnot's raillery
 On every learned sot;
 And Garth, the best good Christian he,
 Altho' he knows it not.

Lintot, farewell! thy bard must go;
 Farewell, unhappy Tonson!
 Heaven gives thee for thy loss of Rowe,
 Lean Philips, and fat Johnson.

Why

Why should I stay? Both parties rage;
My vixen mistress squalls;
The wits in envious feuds engage;
And Homer (damn him!) calls.

The love of arts lies cold and dead
In Hallifax's urn;
And not one Muse of all he fed,
Has yet the grace to mourn.

My friends, by turns, my friends confound,
Betray, and are betray'd:
Poor Y - - rs sold for fifty pounds,
And B - - - ll is a jade.

Why make I friendships with the great,
When I no favour seek?
Or follow girls seven hours in eight?—
I us'd but once a week.

Still idle, with a busy air,
Deep whimsies to contrive;
The gayest valetudinaire,
Most thinking rake alive.

Solicitous for other ends,
Tho' fond of dear repose;
Careless or drowsy with my friends,
And frolick with my foes.

Luxurious lobster-nights, farewell,
 For sober, studious days!
 And Burlington's delicious meal,
 For fallads, tarts, and pease!

Adieu to all but Gay alone,
 Whose soul, sincere and free,
 Loves all mankind, but flatters none,
 And so may starve with me.

These Lines were added by Mr. POPE after the present Conclusion of his Address to Miss MARTHA BLOUNT, on her leaving Town, &c. "As some fond Virgin, &c."

IN this strange town a different course we take,
 Refine ourselves to spirit, for your sake.
 For want of you, we spend our random wit on
 The first we find with Needham, Brooks, or Briton.
 Hackney'd in sin, we beat about the town,
 And like sure spaniels, at first scent lie down:
 Were Virtue's self in silks—faith keep away!
 Or virtue's virtue scarce would last a day.

Thus, Madam, most men talk, and some men do;
 The rest is told you in a line or two.
 Some strangely wonder you're not fond to marry—
 A double jest still pleases sweet Sir Harry —
 Small-pox is rife, and Gay in dreadful fear—
 The good priests whisper—Where's the chevalier?
 Much in your absence B—'s heart endures,
 And if poor Pope is —, the fault is yours.

The following Lines were sung by DURASTANTI, when she took her leave of the English Stage. The Words were in Haste put together by Mr. POPE, at the Request of the Earl of PETERBOROW.

GENEROUS, gay, and gallant nation,
 Bold in arms, and bright in arts;
 Land secure from all invasion,
 All but Cupid's gentle darts!
 From your charms, oh who would run?
 Who would leave you for the fun?

Happy soil, adieu, adieu!
 Let old charmers yield to new.
 In arms, in arts, be still more shining;
 All your joys be still encreasing;
 All your tastes be still refining;
 All your jars for ever ceasing:
 But let old charmers yield to new:—
 Happy soil, adieu, adieu!

Upon the Duke of MARLBOROUGH'S House at Woodstock.

Atria longè patent ; sed nec cœnantibus usquam,
 Nec fomno locus est : quàm bene non habites !

MART. Epig.

SEE, Sir, here's the grand approach,
 This way is for his Grace's coach ;
 There lies the bridge, and here's the clock,
 Observe the lion and the cock,
 The spacious court, the colonnade,
 And mark how wide the hall is made !
 The chimneys are so well design'd,
 They never smoke in any wind.
 This gallery's contriv'd for walking,
 The windows to retire and talk in ;
 The council-chamber for debate,
 And all the rest are rooms of state.

Thanks, Sir, cry'd I, 'tis very fine,
 But where d'ye sleep, or where d'ye dine ?
 I find by all you have been telling,
 That 'tis a house, but not a dwelling.

Epistles.*

SAY, St. John, who alone peruse
 With candid eye, the mimick muse,
 What schemes of politics, or laws,
 In Gallic lands the patriot draws!

 Then all the tomes of Haine's band?
 "Or shoots he folly as it flies?
 "Or catches manners as they rise?"
 Or urg'd by unquench'd native heat,
 Does St. John Greenwich sports repeat?
 Where (emulous of Chartres' fame)
 Ev'n Chartres' self is scarce a name.

"Their sons shall blush their fathers were his foes;"

being so contradictory, probably occasioned the former to be suppressed.

Is to your injur'd country due. 30

In spite of fears, of mercy spite,
My genius still must rail, and write.
Haste to thy Twick'nham's safe retreat,
And mingle with the grumbling great ;
There, half devour'd by spleen, you'll find 35
The rhyming bubbler of mankind ;
There (objects of our mutual hate)
We'll ridicule both church and state.

A Fragment, attributed by some to Mr. POPE, and by others to Mr. CONGREVE. It has however been seen in the Hand-writing of the former.

WHAT are the falling rills, the pendant shades,
The morning bow'rs, the evening colonnades,
But soft recesses for th' uneasy mind
To sigh unheard in, to the passing wind!
So the struck deer, in some sequester'd part,
Lies down to die (the arrow in his heart)
There hid in shades, and wasting day by day,
Inly he bleeds, and pants his soul away.

Verses left by Mr. POPE, on his lying in the same Bed which WILMOT, the celebrated Earl of ROCHESTER, slept in, at Adderbury, then belonging to the Duke of ARGYLE, July 9th, 1739.

WITH no poetic ardour fir'd
 I press the bed where Wilmot lay;
 That here he lov'd, or here expir'd,
 Begets no numbers grave, or gay.

But in thy roof, Argyle, are bred
 Such thoughts as prompt the brave to lie
 Stretch'd out in honour's nobler bed,
 Beneath a nobler roof—the sky.

Such flames as high in patriots burn,
 Yet stoop to bless a child or wife;
 And such as wicked kings may mourn,
 When freedom is more dear than life.

THE CHALLENGE.

A COURT BALLAD.

To the Tune of "To all you Ladies now at Land, &c."

I.

To one fair lady out of court,
 And two fair ladies in,
 Who think the Turk * and Pope † a sport,
 And wit and love no sin;
 Come, these soft lines, with nothing stiff in,
 To Bellenden, Lepell, and Griffin.
 With a fa, la, la.

II.

What passes in the dark third row,
 And what behind the scene,
 Couches and crippled chairs I know,
 And garrets hung with green;
 I know the swing of sinful hack,
 Where many damfels cry alack.
 With a fa, la, la.

III. Then

NOTES.

* Ulrick, the little Turk. † The Author.

III. THE CHALLENGE.

Then why to courts should I repair,
 Where's such ado with Townshend?
 To hear each mortal stamp and swear,
 And ev'ry speech with Zounds end;
 To hear 'em rail at honest Sunderland,
 And rashly blame the realm of Blunderland*.
 With a fa, la, la.

IV.

Alas! like Schutz I cannot pun,
 Like Grafton court the Germans;
 Tell Pickenbourg how slim she's grown,
 Like Meadows run to sermons;
 To court ambitious men may roam,
 But I and Marlbro' stay at home.
 With a fa, la, la.

V.

In truth, by what I can discern,
 Of courtiers 'twixt you three,
 Some wit you have, and more may learn
 From court, than Gay or Me:
 Perhaps, in time, you'll leave high diet,
 To sup with us on milk and quiet.
 With a fa, la, la.

* Ireland.

VI.

At Leicester-Fields, a house full high,
 With door all painted green,

Where ribbons wave upon the tye,

(A Milliner I mean ;)

There may you meet us three to three,

For Gay can well make two of Me.

With a fa, la, la.

VII.

But shou'd you catch the prudish itch,

And each become a coward,

Bring sometimes with you lady Rich,

And sometimes mistress Howard ;

For virgins to keep chaste must go

Abroad with such as are not so.

With a fa, la, la.

VIII.

And thus, fair maids, my ballad ends ;

God send the king safe landing* ;

And make all honest ladies friends

To armies that are standing ;

Preserve the limits of these nations,

And take off ladies limitations.

With a fa, la, la.

* This Ballad was written anno 1717.

THE THREE GENTLE SHEPHERDS.

OF gentle Philips will I ever sing,
 With gentle Philips shall the vallies ring.
 My numbers too for ever will I vary,
 With gentle Budgell, and with gentle Carey.
 Or if in ranging of the names I judge ill,
 With gentle Carey and with gentle Budgell,
 Oh! may all gentle bards together place ye,
 Men of good hearts, and men of delicacy.
 May satire ne'er befool ye, or beknave ye,
 And from all wits that have a knack, God save ye.

MR. POPE'S WELCOME FROM GREECE.

A Copy of Verses, written by Mr. GAY upon Mr. POPE'S having finished his Translation of HOMER'S ILIAD.

I.

LONG hast thou, friend! been absent from thy soil,
Like patient Ithacus at siege of Troy;
I have been witness of thy six years toil,
Thy daily labours, and thy night's annoy,
Lost to thy native land, with great turmoil, 5
On the wide sea, oft threat'ning to destroy:
Methinks with thee I've trod Sigaeon ground,
And heard the shores of Hellespont resound.

II.

Did I not see thee when thou first sett'st sail
To seek adventures fair in Homer's land? 10
Did I not see thy sinking spirits fail,
And wish thy bark had never left the strand?
Ev'n in mid ocean often didst thou quail,
And oft lift up thy holy eye and hand,
Praying the Virgin dear, and faintly choir, 15
Back to the port to bring thy bark entire.

III.

Cheer up, my friend, thy dangers now are o'er ;
 Methinks—nay, sure the rising coasts appear ;
 Hark how the guns salute from either shore,
 As thy trim vessel cuts the Thames so fair : 20
 Shouts answ'ring shouts, from Kent and Essex roar,
 And bells break loud thro' every gust of air :
 Bonfires do blaze, and bones and cleavers ring,
 As at the coming of some mighty king.

IV.

Now pass we Gravesend with a friendly wind, 25
 And Tilbury's white fort, and long Blackwall ;
 Greenwich, where dwells the friend of human kind,
 More visited than either park or hall,
 Withers the good, and (with him ever join'd)
 Facetious Disney, greet thee first of all : 30
 I see his chimney smoke, and hear him say,
 Duke ! that's the room for Pope, and that for Gay.

V.

Come in, my friends, here shall ye dine and lie,
 And here shall breakfast, and here dine again ;
 And sup, and breakfast on, (if ye comply) 35
 For I have still some dozens of champaign :
 His voice still lessens as the ship sails by ;
 He waves his hand to bring us back in vain ;

For

For now I see, I see proud London's spires ; 40
Greenwich is lost, and Deptford dock retires.

VI.

Oh, what a concourse swarms on yonder key!

The sky re-echoes with new shouts of joy :
By all this show, I ween, 'tis Lord May's day ;

I hear the voice of trumpet and hautboy.— 45
No, now I see them near—oh, these are they

Who come in crowds to welcome thee from Troy.
Hail to the bard whom long as lost we mourn'd,
From siege, from battle, and from storm return'd!

VII.

Of goodly dames, and courteous knights, I view 50

The filken petticoat, and broider'd vest ;

Yea Peers, and mighty Dukes, with ribbands blue,
(True blue, fair emblem of unstained breast.)

Others I see, as noble, and more true,

By no court-badge distinguish'd from the rest: 55

First see I Methuen, of sincerest mind,
As Arthur grave, as soft as woman kind.

VIII. What

NOTES.

VER. 57. As Arthur grave, &c.] This person is mentioned in the Epistle to Arbuthnot, v. 23. :

“ Arthur, whose giddy son neglects the laws,
Imputes to me, and my damn'd works, the cause !”

VIII.

What lady's that, to whom he gently bends ?

Who knows not her ? ah ! those are Wortley's eyes ?
How art thou honour'd, number'd with her friends :

For she distinguishes the good and wise. 61

The sweet-tongu'd Murray near her side attends.

Now to my heart the glance of Howard flies ;
Now Harvey, fair of face, I mark full well,
With thee, youth's youngest daughter, sweet Lepell.

IX.

I see two lovely sisters, hand in hand, 65

The fair hair'd Martha, and Teresa brown ;

Madge Bellenden, the tallest of the land ;

And smiling Mary, soft and fair as down.

Yonder I see the chearful Duchefs stand, 70

For friendship, zeal, and blithsome humours known ;

Whence that loud shout in such a hearty strain ?

Why, all the Hamiltons are in her train.

X.

See next the decent Scudamore advance,

With Winchelsea, still meditating song : 75

With her perhaps Miss Howe came there by chance,

Nor knows with whom, or why she comes along.

Far

NOTES.

VER. 62. The sweet-tongu'd Murray,] The present Lord Mansfield.

Far off from these see Santlow, fam'd for dance ;
 And frolick Bicknell, and her sister young ;
 With other names, by me not to be nam'd, 80
 Much lov'd in private, not in publick fam'd !

XI.

But now behold the female band retire,
 And the shrill music of their voice is still'd !
 Methinks I see fam'd Buckingham admire,
 That in Troy's ruin thou hadst not been kill'd ; 85
 Sheffield, who knows to strike the living lyre,
 With hand judicious, like thy Homer skill'd.
 Bathurst impetuous hastens to the coast,
 Whom you and I strive who shall love the most.

XII.

See generous Burlington, with goodly Bruce, 90
 (But Bruce comes wafted in a soft sedan)
 Dan Prior next, belov'd by every muse,
 And friendly Congreve, unreprouchful man !
 (Oxford by Cunningham hath sent excuse)
 See hearty Watkins comes with cup and cann ; 95
 And Lewis, who has never friend forsaken ;
 And Laughton whisp'ring asks—Is Troy town taken?

XIII. Earl

NOTES.

VER. 78. Santlow, fam'd for dance ;] She afterwards married Booth the player. Mrs. Bicknell, the actress, is mentioned either in the Spectator or Tatler, with applause.

XIII.

Earl Warwick comes, of free and honest mind ;
 Bold, gen'rous Craggs, whose heart was ne'er dis-
 guis'd :

Ah why, sweet St. John, cannot I thee find? 100

St. John for ev'ry social virtue priz'd.—

Alas! to foreign climates he's confin'd,

Or else to see thee here I well surmiz'd :

Thou too, my Swift, dost breathe Bœotian air ;

When wilt thou bring back wit and humour here?

XIV.

Harcourt I see for eloquence renown'd,

The mouth of justice, oracle of law!

Another Simon is beside him found,

Another Simon, like as straw to straw. 109

How Lansdown smiles, with lasting laurel crown'd!

What mitred prelate there commands our awe?

See Rochester approving nods his head,

And ranks one modern with the mighty dead.

XV. Carlton

NOTES.

VER. 112. See Rochester approving nods his head,] So in the Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot:

“ Ev'n mitred Rochester would nod the head.”

XV.

Carlton and Chandois thy arrival grace ;

Hanmer, whose eloquence th' unbiafs'd fways ; 115

Harley, whose goodnefs opens in his face,

And fhews his heart the feat where virtue ftays.

Ned Blount advances next, with bufy pace,

In hafte, but fauntring, hearty in his ways :

I fee the friendly Carylls come by dozens, 120

Their wives, their uncles, daughters, fons, and coufins.

XVI.

Arbuthnot there I fee, in phyfic's art,

As Galen learn'd, or famed Hippocrate ;

Whofe company drives forrow from the heart,

As all difeafe his medicines difspate : 125

Kneller amid the triumph bears his part,

Who could (were mankind loft) anew create :

What can th' extent of his vafst foul confine ?

A painter, critic, engineer, divine !

XVII. Thee

NOTES.

VER. 126. Kneller amid, &c.] This is no more than a compliment to the vanity of Sir Godfrey, which Pope and other wits were always putting to the ftrongeft trials. "Sir Godfrey," fays Pope, "I believe if God Almighty had had your affiftance, the world would have been formed more perfect." "Fore God," fays Kneller, "I believe fo." He was frequently (as Mr. Walpole obferves) very free and fingular in his converfation on religion. This

Thee Jervas hails, robust and debonair, 130
 Now have [we] conquer'd Homer, friends, he cries :
 Dartneuf, grave joker, joyous Ford is there,
 And wond'ring Maine, so fat with laughing eyes
 (Gay, Maine, and Cheney, boon companions dear, Gay fat, Maine fatter, Cheney huge of size) 135
 Yea Dennis, Gildon, (hearing thou hast riches)
 And honest, hatless Cromwell, with red breeches.

O Wanley, whence com'st thou with shorten'd hair,
 And visage from thy shelves with dust besprent ?

“ Forsooth

NOTES.

adulation of Pope, Addison, Prior, &c. appears to have heightened his natural absurdities, as he had not discernment enough to discover that they were only soothing him to paint for them gratis, or diverting themselves at the expence of his credulity. Sir Godfrey had drawn for Pope the statues of Apollo, Venus, and Hercules. Pope paid for them with the following stanza :

“ What god, what genius did the pencil move,
 When Kneller painted these !

'Twas friendship warm as Phœbus, kind as love,
 And strong as Hercules.”

On these lines, which their author wisely suppressed, Mr. Walpole has offered a very just criticism. See his Anecdotes, &c. vol. iii. p. 112.

VER. 132. Joyous Ford is there,] Charles Ford, Esq. was by Swift's interest appointed Gazetteer. See the Dean's Letter to Mrs. Dingley, dated July 1, 1712.

VER. 139. With dust besprent ?] So in the Dunciad, b. iii. v. 185.

“ But who is he in closet close ypent
 Of sober face, with learned dust besprent ?”

Humphrey Wanley was librarian to Lord Oxford.

- “ Forfooth (quoth he) from placing Homer there,
 “ For ancients to compyle is myne entente : 141

 “ But hither me hath my meeke lady sent :—

NOTES.

VER. 149. Slow along.] The names of the majority of persons here enumerated, are in want of no illustration; and concerning a few of them, it would be difficult to supply any. Titcomb, however,

Ayrs, Graham, Buckridge, joy thy voyage done ;
 But who can count the leaves, the stars, the sand ?
 Lo Stonor, Fenton, Caldwell, Ward, and Broome !
 Lo thousands more, but I want rhyme and room !

How lov'd ! how honour'd thou ! yet be not vain !

And sure thou art not, for I hear thee say,
 All this, my friends, I owe to Homer's strain,
 On whose strong pinions I exalt my lay. 165

What from contending cities did he gain ;
 And what rewards his grateful country pay ?
 None, none were paid—why then all this for me ?
 These honours, Homer, had been just to thee.

VERSES TO DR. BOLTON,

In the Name of Mrs. BUTTER's Spirit, lately deceased.

STRIPT to the naked soul, escap'd from clay,
 From doubts unfetter'd, and dissolv'd in day;
 Unwarm'd by vanity, unreach'd by strife,
 And all my hopes and fears thrown off with life;
 Why am I charm'd by friendship's fond essays,
 And though unbody'd, conscious of thy praise?
 Has pride a portion in the parted soul?
 Does passion still the firmless mind controul! 8
 Can gratitude out-pant the silent breath!
 Or a friend's sorrow pierce the gloom of death!
 No—'tis a spirit's nobler task of bliss;
 That feels the worth it left, in proofs like this;
 That not its own applause, but thine approves,
 Whose practice praises, and whose virtue loves;
 Who liv'st to crown departed friends with fame;
 Then dying, late, shalt all thou gav'st reclaim.

NOTES.

VER. 8. Firmless] A new-coined, and not a very happy epithet.

VERSES TO DR. BOLTON

To the Memory of Mrs. Bolton's Poem, July 1784.

I have not to the naked soul; etc. / etc. / etc.
 From hopes unnumber'd, and desires / etc. / etc.
 Unwarranted by reason, unprovoked by spite,
 And all my hopes and fears thrown off with life;
 Why am I charm'd by friendship's fond entreaties,
 And think myself a conqueror of the world?
 Has gain a portion in the sacred soul?
 Does passion fill the limbeck'd mind control?
 Can gratitude out-pay the silent breast?
 Or a friend's sorrow pierce the gloom of death?
 No—our spirit's nobler talk of bliss;
 That tells the world it felt, in goods like this,
 That not its own applause, but kind approval,
 While practice prais'd, and whole virtue lov'd;
 Who liv'd to crown departed friends with fame;
 That's the true end, that all our great'st aim.

ON CHARLES EARL OF DORSET,

IN THE CHURCH OF WITHYAM IN SUSSEX.

DORSET, the Grace of Courts, the Muses' Pride,
 Patron of Arts, and Judge of Nature, dy'd.
 The scourge of Pride, tho' sanctify'd or great,
 Of Fops in Learning, and of Knaves in State:
 Yet soft his Nature, tho' severe his Lay,
 His Anger moral, and his Wisdom gay.
 Blest Satirist! who touch'd the Mean so true,
 As show'd, Vice had his hate and pity too.
 Blest Courtier! who could King and Country please,
 Yet sacred keep his Friendships, and his Ease.
 Blest Peer! his great Forefathers ev'ry grace
 Reflecting, and reflected in his Race;
 Where other BUCKHURSTS, other DORSETS shine,
 And Patriots still, or Poets, deck the line.

NOTES.

Epitaphs.] These Epitaphs are in general over-run with point and antithesis, and are a kind of panegyric epigrams; they are consequently very different from the simple sepulchral inscriptions of the ancients; of which that of Meleager on his Wife, in the Greek anthology, is a model and master-piece.

II.

ON SIR WILLIAM TRUMBAL,

One of the principal Secretaries of State to King WILLIAM III. who having resigned his Place, died in his Retirement at Easthamsted, in Berkshire, 1716.

A PLEASING Form; a firm, yet cautious Mind;
 Sincere, tho' prudent; constant, yet resign'd:
 Honour unchang'd, a Principle profess'd,
 Fix'd to one side, but mod'rate to the rest:
 An honest Courtier, yet a Patriot too; 5
 Just to his Prince, and to his Country true:
 Fill'd with the Sense of Age, the Fire of Youth,
 A Scorn of Wrangling, yet a Zeal for Truth:
 A gen'rous Faith, from Superstition free;
 A Love to Peace, and Hate of Tyranny; 10
 Such this Man was; who now, from earth remov'd,
 At length enjoys that Liberty he lov'd.

NOTES.

VER. 5. A Patriot too;] Dr. Johnson objects to the closing this verse with the word too, and to the word fill'd in the seventh line, as weak and prosaic, having no particular adaptation to any of the words that follow it. The whole of this epitaph is one string of antitheses throughout.

III.

ON THE HON. SIMON HARCOURT,

ONLY SON OF THE LORD CHANCELLOR HARCOURT ;

At the Church of Stanton-Harcourt in Oxfordshire, 1720.

To this sad Shrine, whoe'er thou art! draw near,
Here lies the Friend most lov'd, the Son most
dear :

Who ne'er knew Joy, but Friendship might divide,
Or gave his Father Grief but when he dy'd.

How vain is Reason, Eloquence how weak! 5
If Pope must tell what HARCOURT cannot speak.
Oh let thy once-lov'd Friend inscribe thy Stone,
And, with a Father's sorrows, mix his own!

NOTES.

VER. 4. But when he dy'd.] These were the very words used by Louis XIV. when his Queen died, 1683; though it is not to be imagined they were copied by Pope. Such coincidences in writers are not uncommon.

VER. 6. If Pope must speak.] A very wretched quibble on the eloquence of Lord Harcourt!

ON JAMES CRAGGS, ESQ.

In Westminster-Abbey.

JACOBUS CRAGGS

REGI MAGNAE BRITANNIAE A SECRETIS

PRINCIPIS PARITER AC POPULI AMOR ET DELICIAE:

OB. FEB. XIV. MDCCXX.

Statesman, yet Friend to Truth! of Soul sincere,
 In Action faithful, and in Honour clear!
 Who broke no Promise, serv'd no private End,
 Who gain'd no Title, and who lost no Friend,
 Ennobled by Himself, by All approv'd,
 Prais'd, wept, and honour'd, by the Muse he lov'd.

THE following severe Epitaph on Mr. Craggs, a Parody on the Duke of Buckingham's, in Westminster Abbey, was written by Mr. Smith, Author of Phædra Hippolitus :

M. S. J. A. CRAGGS, ARM.

PRO MEIS SEMPER.

“ An epitaph,” says Dr. Johnson, “ given partly in prose and partly in verse, partly in English and partly in Latin, like that on Craggs, resembles the conversation of a foreigner, who tells part of his meaning by words, and conveys part by signs.”

INTENDED FOR MR. ROWE,

IN WESTMINSTER-ABBEY.

THY Reliques, ROWE, to this fair Urn we trust,
 And sacred, place by DRYDEN'S awful dust :
 Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
 To which thy Tomb shall guide inquiring eyes.

Peace

VARIATIONS.

He altered it much for the better, as it now stands on the Monument in the Abbey, erected to ROWE and his Daughter:

Thy Reliques, ROWE ! to this sad shrine we trust,
 And near thy SHAKESPEAR place thy honour'd bust.
 Oh, next him, skill'd to draw the tender tear,
 For never heart felt passion more sincere ;
 To nobler sentiment to fire the brave,
 For never BRITON more disdain'd a slave.
 Peace to thy gentle shade, and endless rest ;
 Blest in thy genius, in thy love too blest !
 And blest, that timely from our scene remov'd,
 Thy soul enjoys the liberty it lov'd.

To these, so mourn'd in death, so lov'd in life !
 The childless parent, and the widow'd wife,
 With tears inscribes this monumental stone,
 That holds their ashes and expects her own.

W.

NOTES.

VER. 3. Beneath a rude] The tomb of Mr. Dryden was erected upon this hint by the Duke of Buckingham; to which was originally intended this Epitaph:

“ This

Peace to thy gentle shade, and endless rest!
 Blest in thy Genius, in thy Love too blest!
 One grateful Woman to thy fame supplies
 What a whole thankless land to his denies.

NOTES.

“ This Sheffield rais'd. The sacred dust below
 Was Dryden once : The rest who does not know ? ”

which the Author since changed into the plain inscription now upon it, being only the name of that great poet :

J. DRYDEN,

Natus Aug. 9. 1631. Mortuus Maij 1. 1700.

JOANNES SHEFFIELD DUX BUCKINGHAMIENSIS POSUIT.

P.

IT was always understood that Pope had a sincere regard for Rowe ; but the following extraordinary anecdote is related from Mr. Spence's Collections :

“ Rowe, in Mr. Pope's opinion, maintained a decent character, but had no heart. Mr. Addison was justly offended with some behaviour which arose from that want, and estranged himself from him, which Rowe felt very severely. Mr. Pope, their common friend, knowing this, took an opportunity, at some juncture of Mr. Addison's advancement, to tell him how poor Rowe was grieved at his displeasure, and what satisfaction he expressed at Mr. Addison's good fortune ; which he expressed so naturally, that he (Mr. Pope) could not but think him sincere. Mr. Addison replied, ‘ I do not suspect that he feigned ; but the levity of his heart is such, that he is struck with any new adventure ; and it would affect him just in the same manner, if he heard I was going to be hanged.’ Mr. Pope said, he could not deny but Mr. Addison understood Rowe well.”

VI.

ON MRS. CORBET,

WHO DIED OF A CANCER IN HER BREAST.

HÈRE rests a Woman, good without pretence,
 Blest with plain Reason, and with sober Sense ;
 No Conquest she, but o'er herself, desir'd,
 No Arts essay'd, but not to be admir'd.
 Passion and Pride were to her soul unknown,
 Convinc'd that Virtue only is our own.
 So unaffected, so compos'd a mind ;
 So firm, yet soft ; so strong, yet so refin'd ;
 Heav'n, as its purest gold, by Tortures try'd !
 The Saint sustain'd it, but the Woman dy'd.

NOTES.

VER. 10. The Woman dy'd.] A very pleasing picture of silent domestic virtue !

VII.

On the Monument of the Honourable ROBERT DIGBY, and of his Sister MARY, erected by their Father the Lord DIGBY, in the Church of Sherborne in Dorset-shire, 1727.

Go! fair example of untainted youth,
Of modest wisdom, and pacific truth:
Compos'd in suff'rings, and in joy sedate,
Good without noise, without pretension great.
Just of thy word, in ev'ry thought sincere,
Who knew no Wish but what the world might hear:
Of softest manners, unaffected mind,
Lover of peace, and friend of human kind:
Go live! for Heav'n's Eternal year is thine,
Go, and exalt thy Moral to Divine.

And thou, blest Maid! attendant on his doom,
Pensive hast follow'd to the silent tomb,
Steer'd the same course to the same quiet shore,
Not parted long, and now to part no more!
Go then, where only bliss sincere is known!
Go, where to love and to enjoy are one!

Yet take these Tears, Mortality's relief,
And till we share your joys, forgive our grief:
These little rites, a Stone, a Verse receive;
'Tis all a Father, all a Friend can give!

MY father, who was an intimate friend and contemporary at Magdalen College, Oxford, with Mr. Robert Digby, was always saying that this excellent character was not over-drawn, and had every virtue in it here enumerated; and that Mr. Digby had more of the mitis sapientix, as Horace finely expresses it, than any man he had ever known. The same said the amiable Mr. Holdsworth, author of Muscipula. They were all three pupils of Dr. Sacheverell, who at that time was the friend of Addison, and was in great vogue as an able tutor, before he entered so violently into those absurd politics that so much disgraced him.

VIII.

ON SIR GODFREY KNELLER,

IN WESTMINSTER-ABBEY, 1723.

KNELLER, by Heav'n and not a Master taught,
Whose Art was Nature, and whose Pictures
Thought ;

Now for two Ages having snatch'd from fate
Whate'er was beauteous, or whate'er was great,
Lies crown'd with Princes honours, Poets lays, 5
Due to his Merit, and brave Thirst of praise.

Living, great Nature fear'd he might outvie
Her works; and, dying, fears herself may die.

IMITATIONS.

VER. 7. Imitated from the famous Epitaph on Raphael.

“ Raphael, timuit, quo sospite, vinci
Rerum magna parens, et moriente, mori.”

P.

NOTES.

VER. 7. Living, great Nature] Much better translated by Mr. W. Harrison, of New College, a favourite of Swift, communicated to me by Dr. Lowth:

“ Here Raphael lies, by whose untimely end
Nature both lost a rival and a friend.”

Notwithstanding the partiality of Pope, this artist little deserved to be consulted by our poet, as he was, concerning the arrangements of the subjects represented on the shield of Achilles. These required a genius of a higher order. Mr. Flaxman, lately arrived from Italy, by a diligent study of the antique, and the force of his genius, has given designs from Homer far beyond any that have yet appeared.

IX.

ON GENERAL HENRY WITHERS.

IN WESTMINSTER-ABBEY, 1729.

HERE, WITHERS, rest! thou bravest, gentlest mind,
 Thy Country's friend, but more of human kind,
 Oh born to Arms! O Worth in Youth approv'd!
 O soft Humanity, in Age belov'd!
 For thee the hardy Vet'ran drops a tear,
 And the gay Courtier feels the sigh sincere.

WITHERS, adieu! yet not with thee remove
 Thy Martial spirit! or thy social love!
 Amidst Corruption, Luxury, and Rage,
 Still leave some ancient Virtues to our age:
 Nor let us say (those English glories gone)
 The last true Briton lies beneath this stone.

X.

ON MR. ELIJAH FENTON,

AT EASTHAMSTED IN BERKS, 1730.

THIS modest Stone, what few vain marbles can,
 May truly say, Here lies an honest Man :
 A Poet, blest beyond the Poet's fate,
 Whom Heav'n kept sacred from the Proud and Great:
 Foe to loud Praise, and Friend to learned Ease,
 Content with Science in the Vale of Peace.
 Calmly he look'd on either Life, and here
 Saw nothing to regret, or there to fear ;
 From Nature's temp'rate feast rose satisfy'd,
 Thank'd Heav'n that he had liv'd, and that he dy'd.

HIS integrity, his learning, and his genius, deserved this character ; it is not in any respect over-wrought. His poems are not sufficiently read and admired. The Epistle to Southerne, the Ode to the Sun, the Fair Nun, and, above all, the Ode to Lord Gower, are excellent. Akenfide frequently said to me, that he thought this Ode the best in our language, next to Alexander's Feast. " I envy Fenton," said Pope to Mr. Walter Harte, " his Horatian Epistle to Lambard." Parts of Mariamne are beautiful, and it ought to take its turn on the stage. Just before he died, Fenton was introduced into Mr. Cragg's family by Pope's recommendation.

Not only the second line, but almost the whole of this epitaph, is borrowed from Crashaw, an imitator of Marino, and a writer of whom Pope, and indeed Cowley, were fond. He translated a book of Marino's Strage de gli Innocente.

XI.

ON MR. GAY,

IN WESTMINSTER-ABBEY, 1732.

OF Manners gentle, of Affections mild;
 In Wit, a Man; Simplicity, a Child:
 With native Humour temp'ring virtuous Rage.
 Form'd to delight at once and lash the age:
 Above Temptation, in a low Estate, 5
 And uncorrupted, ev'n among the Great:
 A safe Companion, and an easy Friend,
 Unblam'd through Life, lamented in thy End.
 These are Thy Honours! not that here thy Bust
 Is mix'd with Heroes, or with Kings thy dust; 10
 But that the Worthy and the Good shall say,
 Striking their pensive bosoms—Here lies GAY.

NOTES.

VER. 1. Of Manners gentle,] “The eight first lines,” says Johnson, “have no grammar; the adjectives are without any substantives, and the epithets without a subject.”

It is somewhat singular that there should be an improper expression in Bishop Warburton's own epitaph. His genius and learning are called two talents, but learning is an acquirement.

VER. 12. Here lies Gay,] i. e. in the hearts of the good and worthy.—Mr. Pope told me his conceit in this line was not generally understood. For, by peculiar ill-luck, the formulary expression which makes the beauty, misleads the reader into a sense which takes it quite away. W.

The conceit in the last line is certainly very puerile, and a false thought borrowed from Crashaw:

“Entomb'd, not in this stone but in my heart.”

CRASHAW, Poems, p. 94

XII.

INTENDED FOR SIR ISAAC NEWTON,
 ON DR. FRANCIS ATTERBURY,
 IN WESTMINSTER-ABBEY.

ISAACUS NEWTONUS:

Quem Immortalem

Testantur Tempus, Natura, Coelum :

Mortalem

Hoc marmor fatetur.

Nature and Nature's Laws lay hid in Night :

GOD said, Let Newton be! and all was Light.

NOTES.

VER. 1. Nature] The antithesis betwixt Mortalem and Immortalem is much unsuited to the subject; and the second English line, "God said, &c." borders a little on the profane. The magnificent Fiat of Moses will be always striking and admired, notwithstanding the cold objections of Le Clerc and Huet.

VER. 2. Let Newton be!] He was born on the very day on which Galileo died. When Ramsay was one day complimenting him on his discoveries in philosophy, he answered, as I read it in Spence's Anecdotes, "Alas! I am only like a child picking up pebbles on the shore of the great ocean of truth."

And all was Light.] It had been better—and there was Light,—as more conformable to the reality of the fact, and to the allusion whereby it is celebrated.

XIII.

ON DR. FRANCIS ATTERBURY,

BISHOP OF ROCHESTER,

Who died in Exile at Paris, 1732, (his only Daughter having expired in his Arms, immediately after she arrived in France to see him.)

DIALOGUE.

SHE.

YES, we have liv'd—one pang, and then we part!
May Heav'n, dear Father! now have all thy Heart.

Yet ah! how once we lov'd, remember still,
Till you are dust like me.

HE.

Dear Shade! I will:
Then mix this dust with thine—O spotless Ghost!
O more than Fortune, Friends, or Country lost!

Is

NOTES.

VER. I. Yes, we have liv'd—] I know not why this Dialogue should be called an Epitaph. Dr. Johnson says, “it is contemptible, and should have been suppressed for the author’s sake.” I see no reason for this harsh sentence passed upon it.

Is there on Earth one care, one wish beside?

Yes—SAVE MY COUNTRY, HEAV'N,

—He said, and dy'd.

NOTES.

VER. 9. Save my Country, Heav'n,] Alluding to the Bishop's frequent use and application of the expiring words of the famous Father Paul, in his prayer for the state, "Esto perpetua." With what propriety the Bishop applied it at his trial, and is here made to refer to it in his last moments, they will understand who know what conformity there was in the lives of the Prelate and the Monk. The character of our countryman is well known. And that of the Father may be told in very few words. He was profoundly skilled in all divine and human learning. He employed his whole life in the service of the State, against the unjust encroachments of the Church. He was modest, humble, and forgiving, candid, patient, and just; free from all prejudices of party, and all the projects of ambition; in a word, the happiest compound of science, wisdom, and virtue. W.

This severe sarcasm would certainly, if he had seen it, been highly displeasing to Pope, who retained for Atterbury the warmest affection and respect. But from the Letters of Atterbury, printed, in three volumes, by Mr. Nicholls, and particularly from those in p. 148. to p. 168. it almost indisputably appears that the Bishop was engaged in a treasonable correspondence, and in the intrigues of the Pretender.

XIV.

ON EDMUND DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM,

WHO DIED IN THE NINETEENTH YEAR OF HIS AGE, 1735.

IF modest Youth, with cool Reflection crown'd,
 And ev'ry op'ning Virtue blooming round,
 Could save a Parent's justest Pride from fate,
 Or add one Patriot to a sinking state;
 This weeping marble had not ask'd thy Tear,
 Or sadly told, how many Hopes lie here!
 The living Virtue now had shone approv'd,
 The Senate heard him, and his Country lov'd.
 Yet softer Honours, and less noisy Fame
 Attend the shade of gentle BUCKINGHAM:
 In whom a Race, for Courage fam'd and Art,
 Ends in the milder Merit of the Heart;
 And Chiefs or Sages long to Britain giv'n,
 Pays the last Tribute of a Saint to Heav'n.

“ THIS epitaph,” says Johnson, “ is preferred by Dr. Warburton to the rest ; but I know not for what reason. To crown with reflection, is surely a mode of speech approaching to nonsense. Opening virtues, blooming round, is something like tautology ; the six following lines are poor and profaic.”

XV.

FOR ONE WHO WOULD NOT BE BURIED
IN WESTMINSTER-ABBEY.

HEROES and KINGS! your distance keep:
In peace let one poor Poet sleep,
Who never flatter'd Folks like you:
Let Horace blush, and Virgil too.

ANOTHER, ON THE SAME.

UNDER this Marble, or under this Sill,
Or under this Turf, or e'en what they will;
Whatever an Heir, or a Friend in his stead,
Or any good creature shall lay o'er my head,
Lies one who ne'er car'd, and still cares not a pin
What they said, or may say, of the mortal within:
But, who living and dying, serene still and free,
Trusts in GOD, that as well as he was, he shall be.

NOTES.

VER. 4. Let Horace]

“ Whose verse adorn'd a tyrant's crimes;
Who saw majestic Rome betray'd,
And lent th' imperial ruffian aid.”

AKENSIDE'S Odes, p. 280. 4to.

FOR ONE WHO WOULD NOT BE BURIED
IN WESTMINSTER-ABBAY.

Here lies a King, whose distant keep
In peace let one poor Poet keep,
Who never flatter'd Tolls like you:
Let Horace blush, and Virgil too.

ANOTHER, ON THE SAME.

Under this Marble, or under this Sill,
Or under this Turf, or e'en what they will,
Whatever an Heir, or a Friend in his stead,
Or any good creature shall lay o'er my head,
Lies one who ne'er car'd, and still cares not a pin
What they said, or may say, of the mortal within:
But, who living and dying, keeps his hill and free,
Trusts in God, that as well as he was, he shall be.

NOTES.

VER. 4. (An Heir.)

As W. C. W. has shew'd a Spain's crimes;
Who saw the Roman's Rome betray'd;
And saw the imperial ruffian side;
And saw the Emperor's Obedience
And saw the Emperor's Obedience
